"4. The compelling all persons to remain in church on sacrament Sundays till after the exhortation, &c.

"On this charge Mr. Blunt speaks fully in his supplementary observations. It will therefore be only necessary for us to state to your lordship what was proved as to the instance mentioned as having occurred on the 1st of September. There appears to us to be no doubt of the substantial truth of the evidence of Mr. Edwards as to Mr. Blunt's words, supported as it was by Mr. Gay and Mr. Tyacke, and in fact not denied by Mr. Blunt himself. With regard to his manner on that occasion, we are inclined to adopt the description of Mr. Blunt's own witness, Mr. Rockruge, that 'his language was very strong and vehement, and his manner much excited.' It is unfortunately too evident, that the effect of this circumstance has been to produce great dissatisfaction. We are sorry to refer your lordship, with on this subject, to a letter of Mr. Hill to Mr. Blunt, intimating his intention to test Mr. Blunt's threat in his own person.

"We rejoice, however, to add, that Mr. Hill has, as yet, forbore to do so, and we trust that he will not.

"6. Refusal to read the Lord's Prayer with Blake, &c.

"It appears that Mr. Blunt, having been applied to by a sick man named Blake, for private communion, Mr. Blunt refused, on the ground that Blake was not to be considered as properly a baptismal person. We refer your lordship to Mr. Blunt's explanation, as giving a full statement of his feeling and practice on the subject. We have no direct proof of any renunciation of Romanism by Blake, or otherwise; but it appears to be a fact, that he has for many years been a constant attendant at the church at Holston, although he has not been a communicant.

"7. Refusal to bury the corpse of a young man, &c.

"Mr. Blunt admits that he did refuse, on the ground of his not having been baptized. It appears that he had been baptized in London by a Wesleyan.

"8. Refusal to marry persons, &c.

"Mr. Blunt's statement on this head appears to be uncontradicted, and our conclusion is, that he did not refuse to perform banns, but to marry a party who could not prove himself to have been baptized.

"Having thus gone through the charges and complaints upon which we had to collect evidence, we trust that your lordship will think we exercise a sound discretion in avoiding any unnecessary comments of our own.

"Your lordship will observe, that Mr. Blunt has referred particularly to the conduct of himself and the clergy at the archdeacon's last visitation (vide sheet 13). Although we cannot see that these circumstances have had any material connexion with the present causes of dissatisfaction on the part of his parishioners. The case has been already so fully before your lordship that it is unnecessary to do more than refer to the fact, that the archdeacon avoided any public censure upon Mr. Blunt's line of conduct on that day, expressing only his intention of leaving the matter entirely to your lordship.

"We believe we have now gone through the whole case with sufficient minuteness to place all its circumstances fully before your lordship. We shall be sincerely gratified if our proceedings should meet with your lordship's approval; but still more so if they shall be found to have tended in any degree to the restoration of Christian charity, and the advancement of the spiritual welfare of the church in Holston.

"We remain, my lord,

"Your lordship's most devoted and obedient servants,

"P.S. 1. In reference to Mr. Blunt's strong and emphatic denial of that part of the 7th charge (see list of causes of complaint) which refers to the proposed notice, 'that dissenters should not be buried until after 8 o'clock, p.m.,' to which Mr. Hill also refers in the concluding part of his letter, it will be sufficient to call your lordship's attention to the draught of notice, written and signed by Mr. Blunt himself. It may be, perhaps, necessary to add in explanation, that the burials in question were those of dissenters unattended by any church service.

"2. Under the notice of the 4th charge, we ought to have added, that it appears to us that Mr. Blunt's practice of reading the exhortation beginning, 'Dearly beloved in the Lord, ye that mind to come to the holy communion,' &c. after the prayer for the church militant, on sacramental Sundays, and his strongly enjoining it upon all persons as an absolute duty to remain in the church till after the conclusion of this exhortation, was, even from his own supplemental statement, that part of his ministerial conduct by which he placed himself most at variance with the feelings and wishes of many of the most respectable members of his congregation.

Judgment.

"Bishopstowe, Oct. 23, 1844.

"I have read with much attention the report made to me by the commissioners of the inquiry holden at Helston on Friday, the 4th inst., into the matters of complaint and dissatisfaction on the part of the parishioners of Helston against their minister, the Rev. Walter Blunt, as stated in a letter to me from Mr. Hill, the churchwarden, dated September the 18th last, and also in an additional paper presented by him at the meeting of the commissioners, entitled 'Causes of complaint.'

"I have likewise read notes of evidence, taken on the occasion by the commissioners, divers documents presented by both parties, and Mr. Blunt's written statement to the commissioners, on the various matters alleged against him.

"I proceed to give my judgment, which is the result of much deliberation, on all the subjects brought to my attention.

"1. First comes 'the use of the surplice in the pulpit; this, however, excited little attention, probably it would scarcely have been noticed, had he not at first preached in the gown.'

"As such a matter seems to have been regarded at first with no more attention than it merited, it is difficult to understand how it should have been swelled into importance afterwards; since the only reason given for its exciting attention at all existed in fullest force at first—that is, when he changed from the gown to the surplice.

"Mr. Blunt says, that he preached in the gown only while he was acting under Mr. Boraston, and not since he was licensed as curate.

"On this particular I have no difficulty in saying, that Mr. Blunt has been right since he has preached in his surplice.

"The sermon is part of the communion service*, and whatever be the proper garb of the minister in the one part of that service, the same ought to be worn by him throughout. The rubric and canons recognise no difference whatever.

"The rubric, at the commencement of 'The order for morning and evening prayer,' says, 'That such ornaments of the church, and of the ministers thereof, at all times of their ministration, shall be retained, and be in use, as were in this church of England by the authority of parliament, in the second year of the reign of King Edward VI.,' in other words, 'a white albe plain, with a vestment or cope.'

"These were forbidden in King Edward the Sixth's Second Book, which ordered that 'The minister at the time of the communion; and at all other times of his ministration, shall use neither albe, vestment, nor cope, but being an archbishop or bishop, he shall have and wear a rochet; and being a priest or deacon, he shall have and wear a surplice only.'

"This was a triumph of the party most opposed to the church of Rome, and most anxious to carry reformation to the very farthest point.

"But their triumph was brief. Within a few months Queen Mary restored popery; and when the accession of Queen Elizabeth brought back the Reformation, she, and the convocation, and the parliament, deliberately rejected the simpler direction of Edward's Second Book, and revived the ornaments of the first. This decision was followed again by the crown, convocation, and parliament, at the restoration of Charles the Second, when the existing Act of Uniformity established the Book of Common Prayer, with its rubrics, in the form in which they now stand.

"From this statement it will be seen, that the surplice may be objected to with some reason; but then it must be because the law requires 'the albe, and the vestment, or the cope.'

* ["The Master of the Temple, in his pamphlet entitled, 'Canons and Rubrics of the Church of England considered,' says, p. 47, 'Neither is the Bishop of Exeter's assertion true, "that the sermon is part of the communion service."']

["This he infers from a rubric at the end of the communion service, taken in conjunction with one at the beginning of that service in Edward the Sixth's First Book. Now, if he had adverted to another rubric in that service, immediately after the blessing, 'The peace,' &c., he would hardly have hazarded so unceremonious a contradiction. The rubric is as follows: 'When the holy communion is celebrated on the work-day, or in private houses, then may be omitted the Gloria in excelsis, the creed, the Agnus Dei, and the exhortation beginning, 'Dearly beloved,' &c.'"]

["Surely the Agnus Dei is here a 'part of the communion service,' if the other matters are parts of it." See relat. the Bishop of Exeter.]

STAT. 3 & 4,
VICT. c. 86.

STAT. 3 & 4
VICT. c. 86.

"Why have these been disused? Because the parishioners—that is, the churchwardens, who represent the parishioners—have neglected their duty to provide them; for such is the duty of the parishioners by the plain and express canon law of England*." (Gibson, 200.) True, it would be a very costly duty, and for that reason, most probably, churchwardens have neglected it, and archdeacons have connived at the neglect. I have no wish that it should be otherwise. But, be this as it may, if the churchwardens of Helston shall perform this duty, at the charge of the parish, providing an albe, a vestment, and a cope, as they might in strictness be required to do, (Gibson, 201.) I shall enjoin the minister, be he who he may, to use them. But until these ornaments are provided by the parishioners, it is the duty of the minister to use the garment actually provided by them for him, which is the surplice. The parishioners never provide a gown, nor, if they did, would he have a right to wear it in any part of his ministrations. For the gown is nowhere mentioned or alluded to in any of the rubrics. Neither is it included, as the albe, the cope, and three surplices expressly are, among 'the furniture and ornaments proper for divine service,' to be provided by the parishioners of every parish. Gibson, ubi supra.

"The 58th Canon of 1604, (which, however, cannot control the Act of Uniformity of 1662,) enjoins that 'every minister, saying the public prayers, or ministering the sacraments, or other rites of the church, shall wear a decent and comely surplice, with sleeves, &c., to be provided at the charge of the parish.' For the things required for the common prayer of the parish were and are to be provided by the parish. If a gown were required, it would be to be provided by the parish.

"But the commissioners say, that Mr. Hill told them at the time of the inquiry, that 'he should not object to the use of the surplice, if it were not the badge of a party.' This, I am aware, is a very common cry. But I cannot forbear from saying, that if any of the clergy deserve to be called a party, in an invidious sense of the phrase, they who agree in violating the law of the church ought to be so designated, not they who observe it. But in the present case, I do not think that any such reproachful name would properly be applied to either the one or the other. Those who observe the law ought to be protected from all reproach by their faithfulness; they who do not observe it, by the long and general, however irregular, prevalence of such non-observance, on the part of the clergy, and of connivance on the part of the bishops.

* ["The Master of the Temple says, in his pamphlet entitled, 'Canons and Rubrics of the Church of England considered,' p. 44, 'It may be doubted, whether this constitution of Archbishop Winchelsea, which relates to popish garments, as they were used more than 100 hundred years before the Reformation, could be enforced in the present day.'

["If the Act of Uniformity requires that the cope be worn, its having been a popish vestment does not make it less requisite. And as the constitution which requires the churchwardens to provide it, is one of the canons 'not contrariant nor repugnant to the laws, statutes, and customs of this realm,' it is still part of our canon law. 25 Hen. 8, c. 19, s. 1.

["If, however, the canon be not binding, there is no way of providing the cope, or enforcing the use of it; and so the surplice (to be provided at the charge of the parish) must be worn in preaching the sermon in the communion service. 58 Can. 1603." See note the Bishop of Exeter.]

"There is one, and one way only, in which all appearance of party and division among the clergy, in this respect, may be avoided. I mean by all of them complying with the easy requisition of the church, that they wear one and the same garb during the whole of the communion service, including the sermon, which, I repeat, is only a part of that service. And the experience which I have had, not only at Helston, but at several other places, of the great practical evils and scandals which have arisen, and are daily arising, from suffering the law of the church in this instance to be set at naught, will make me earnestly call upon my clergy throughout the diocese to return to obedience to the law, by wearing throughout their ministration that dress which is provided for them, the surplice, if the use of the other more costly garments be not (as it is not desired by any that it should be) revived among us.

"2. 'A great deal of dissatisfaction was excited by the substitution of an extemporary dissertation on the Liturgy for a sermon—a sort of lecture, interesting probably to the church antiquarian, but very unsatisfactory to a man anxious to learn his duty to God and man.'

"The habit of preaching extempore was much disapproved by me generally; but as I have never told Mr. Blunt that I disapprove it, I cannot justly censure him for adopting the practice.

"A 'dissertation' in the pulpit on my subject would seem to me highly improper, but whether a sermon may deserve to be called a 'dissertation,' can be decided only by those who have heard it, unless it have been committed to writing, as unfortunately these sermons appear not to have been. This is one of the many grounds on which preaching, either extempore or merely memoriter, may be deemed very undesirable. In such a case, if the sermon be with reason objected to by a hearer, justice can rarely be done to the objector; if it be objected to without reason, the preacher can never do justice to himself.

"In the present instance, Mr. Hill objects to Mr. Blunt's sermons on the Liturgy, not for any unsoundness of doctrine, but because they were 'a sort of lecture, interesting probably to the church antiquarian, but very unsatisfactory to a man anxious to learn his duty to God and man.'

"If such was the character of Mr. Blunt's sermons, I am sorry for it. Most certainly it was not necessary that sermons on the Liturgy should be of so unedifying a description. For the Liturgy is itself a most solemn able application of God's word to practice; instructing all who study it, most richly, most clearly, most persuasively, in all the great duties of Christians. The Liturgy may be made, and in the hands of an able and zealous minister, as Mr. Hill very honourably attests Mr. Blunt to be, might be expected to be made, a most powerful auxiliary to his direct teaching from scripture. It is, therefore, not with surprise, but with much satisfaction, that I find the testimony of one, whom all who know him will esteem a very competent judge, the Rev. W. Thomas, vicar of Sithney, to the character of two of these sermons, which only he heard, and of which he writes to Mr. Blunt, in a letter, transmitted to me by the commissioners, that 'he has no hesitation in repeating now what he had expressed then to his own family, regarding their character, which he considered both interesting and edifying.' It is possible that he may have been peculiarly fortunate in being present at the best specimens of those sermons; but, in the absence of other evidence, I must consider his testimony so far to neutralize Mr. Hill's as to make me decline to pronounce against Mr. Blunt on this point.

"3. 'The disuse of any prayer before or after the sermon.'

"When a question regarding the performance of any part of the Book of Common Prayer is brought before me, I feel it my duty, instead of considering what I or others may desire, to look carefully to the 13th and 14th Car. 2, c. 4, (the Act of Uniformity in Public Worship,) because that is the law, which all the authorities in church and state have concurred in making decisive and conclusive in every such question. I there read that 'an universal agreement in the public worship' is, for the gravest reasons, declared to be the object of the statute, and in order thereto, 'that all ministers shall be bound to say and use the morning prayer, evening prayer, celebration and administration of both the sacraments, &c. in such order and form as is mentioned in the Book of Common Prayer.'

"I further read (s. 17), that 'no form or order of common prayer, or administration of sacraments, &c. shall be openly used in any church, &c. other than what is prescribed and appointed to be used in and by the said book.' It is plain that this latter clause prohibits all addition to, as the other does all diminution from, the form prescribed.

"When, therefore, I receive, as I now do, a complaint against one of my clergy for 'the disuse,' or non-use, 'of any prayer before or after the sermon,' I examine 'what is prescribed and appointed to be used in and by the Book of Common Prayer' in this respect; and I find there, after the Nicene Creed, and after an order for the publication of divers notices, &c., 'Then shall follow the sermon, or one of the homilies already set forth, or hereafter to be set forth by authority.'

"The sermon or homily being finished, 'Then shall the priest return to the Lord's table and begin the offertory,' &c.

"The result is, that no prayer being prescribed and appointed either before or after the sermon, the minister who uses no prayer, either before or after the sermon, strictly conforms to the law of church and state, and is, therefore, not open to any censure or discouragement from his bishop.

"Very true it is, that this practice is now unusual, and that almost all clergymen have been for a very long time accustomed to use, in their parish churches, a collect and the Lord's Prayer before the sermon. So entirely is this custom fixed and rooted among us, that I shall probably surprise most of those to whom I am now writing, when I cite from the 'Directions of King George I. to the archbishops and bishops for preserving of unity in the church,' the sixth of those directions, expressly calling on them to prohibit this very practice, the propriety of which is now esteemed so fixed and certain, that the departure from it by a minister is made matter of remark, and even complaint.

"True it also is, that this royal letter of 1714 directs the bishops 'to require their clergy, in their prayer before sermon, that they do keep strictly to the form in the 55th Canon contained or to the effect thereof,'—in other words, the bidding prayer, as it is commonly called,—which is required by the 55th Canon of 1604 to be used before all sermons.

"But in respect to the canon which requires the use of this form, if there were no authority or practice to the contrary, it must be deemed to be superseded by the rubric which we have just read, so far as concerns the sermon, which is part of the communion service, and could have effect only in the case of sermons at other times, such as in the evening prayer or in the morning prayer on days when the communion service is not used, or in the universities, where, by an express provision of the Act of Uniformity (sect. 23), sermons may be had without being preceded by morning or evening prayer.

"But the direction of King George I. is to the effect of requiring the use of the bidding prayer generally 'before sermon;' and the notorious practice in cathedrals, even before the sermon in the communion service, is in conformity to it. Whether such a royal mandate, and such a practice in cathedrals, be of sufficient authority to counterbalance the letter of the Act of Uniformity, or rather to shew that the act is to be construed as approving the use of this form, are questions which I am not competent to solve. My own opinion, not unaccompanied with doubt, (by reason of the above cited authority, and of that only,) is, that the canon is superseded so far as concerns the sermon in the communion service.

"But, at any rate, and under any view of the matter, the collect with the Lord's Prayer is not in accordance with the rubric, and is repudiated by all authority, however generally used. If, therefore, a prayer before the sermon be insisted on, it can only be the bidding prayer.

"Mr. Blunt, it seems, at first used that prayer, but, entertaining some doubt on the matter, he consulted me. Being so consulted, and not being at the time aware of

STAT. 3 & 4
VICT. c. 86.

STAT. 3 & 4
VICT. c. 86.

King George's letter, I resolved his doubt by saying, that I considered the Act of Uniformity as having superseded the canon, in respect to the sermon in the communion service.

"If it be the wish of either clergy or laity at Helston that I should reconsider this my resolution of Mr. Blunt's doubt, as to the necessity of using the bidding prayer, I am quite willing to do so; and then, if I cannot, by further consideration and inquiry, relieve my own mind from doubt on the subject, I will do, as I rejoice that I am enabled by law to do, submit the doubt to the Archbishop of Canterbury for his final and conclusive judgment.

"Meanwhile, I think it right to say, with reference to the 55th Canon, which orders the bidding prayer, that even if it be not, in any respect, superseded by the Act of Uniformity, it will not necessarily follow that it ought now in all cases to be enforced.

"For the canon law differs in this respect from the temporal law. Where the reason for any canon has ceased, and where, on that or any other account, it has long been suffered by the ecclesiastical authorities to remain unenforced, it is not necessarily to be at once called again into activity; certainly not without previous notice.

"So far, therefore, as regards parish churches, in almost all of which the bidding prayer has long ceased to be used, it may be within the discretion of the ordinary whether to revive the use of it or not. Every ordinary, before he shall resolve in the affirmative, will probably consider well whether there be sufficient cause for reviving it. Is it, for instance, an edifying prayer? No—it is not, strictly speaking, a prayer at all—it is a direction to the people, bidding them to pray, and telling them for whom to pray. And this direction is fulfilled most effectually and most faithfully in the prayer for the church militant. Whenever, therefore, the prayer for the church militant is used in its proper place in the communion service, as it ought to be on every Sunday and holyday in every church, whether the holy communion be administered or not, there the whole matter of the bidding prayer is repeated as a prayer, except as regards the queen's titles, which it would manifestly be irreverent to recount in an address to Almighty God. Now, it was the assertion of these titles that the queen is 'defender of the faith, and in all other causes and over all persons, ecclesiastical as well as temporal, within her dominions supreme,' which seems to have been one, if not the only main end and object of the canon requiring the use of the bidding prayer. I will not at present enter into the proof of this position. I content myself now with saying, that the object of this 55th Canon is very similar to that part of the 1st Canon which requires 'all ecclesiastical persons having cure of souls, and all other preachers, to the uttermost of their wit, knowledge, and learning, to teach, manifest, open, and declare in their sermons, four times at least in the year, that all usurped and foreign power (repugnant to the ancient jurisdiction of the crown over the state ecclesiastical) hath no establishment by the word of God, and is for most just causes taken away and abolished.'

"Both the one canon and the other are equally stringent and imperative, and both have long been suffered, wisely I think, to lie dormant.

"Should the time ever come when it shall be necessary to re-assert the queen's supremacy every Sunday in every church in England—and four times in every year to teach it in sermons—I trust that the bishops will not fail in their duty to enforce both these canons, or the clergy in their duty to observe them. Meanwhile, it will be considered by most men quite sufficient that the bidding prayer be, as it is, used in cathedrals and universities, and sometimes, and on some special occasions, such as visitations of the clergy, elsewhere.

"4. 'The substitution of an extemporary lecture on one of the lessons for a sermon in the evening, this being introduced after the second lesson.'

"Mr. Blunt partially admits the fact, and rests his justification of it on the rubric at the end of the catechism, which requires 'That the curate of every parish shall diligently, upon Sundays and holydays, after the second lesson at evening prayer, openly to the church instruct and examine so many children of his parish sent unto him as he shall think convenient, in some part of the catechism.'

"He says that he cannot catechize at present, 'there being no middle aisle,' and no other proper place 'to gather the children for the purpose.' 'But he can, and does instruct from notes, so as to be understood by the young and by the poor, bearing now or less upon some portion of the catechism, and (so as to keep up the church's instruction for the day) founded generally upon one of the lessons.'

"As no sermon is required by the rubric in the evening prayer, as the only instruction then required is connected with catechizing, and as the time appointed for such instruction is after the second lesson, I should be of opinion that there is nothing wrong in the particular of Mr. Blunt's practice, which appears to approach as near to catechizing as the circumstances of Helston church fairly admit; did not the Act of Uniformity, 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 4, s. 22, expressly provide 'That when any sermon or lecture is to be preached, the common prayers appointed to be read for that time of the day shall be read before such sermon or lecture be preached.'

"This, however, is not in itself a matter requiring grave animadversion. It is correct, not required by the church, and rather contrary to its law. But it was, too, as innovation; and on that account, if otherwise allowable, it ought not to have been bantered lightly, and without previously ascertaining that it would give no offence to the congregation.

"My direction to Mr. Blunt, as cited by himself on another point, was general,—'It is nothing new, unless required by the church, which your congregation will not willingly concur in.'

"5. 'The compelling all persons to remain in church on sacrament Sundays until the conclusion of the exhortation, on pain of excommunication ipso facto.' A custom, as Mr. Blunt allows, peculiar to this church."

"This matter appears to have been in its effect the most mischievous, as it has been in its progress the most irregular and the least justifiable, of all the particulars stated against Mr. Blunt."

"In one point, indeed, the statement itself is somewhat exaggerated; for the utmost which is alleged is far short of 'excommunication ipso facto'—the greater excommunication, cutting off from the communion of Christians."

"But I turn to the case itself."

"What may be the particular part of the service, and whether there be any, when those who do not propose to partake of the holy communion may properly leave the church, is not declared. Manifestly, they ought not to go before that part of the service begins which is used only at the actual celebration of the holy communion—not, therefore, until after the prayer for the church militant. But ought they to go then? There is no direction requiring them to go, or recognising their departure. The earlier Books of Common Prayer plainly contemplate their remaining during the whole administration; for the invitation to those who come to receive the sacrament was, until the last review, worded thus: 'Draw near, and take this holy sacrament to your comfort; make your humble confession to Almighty God before this congregation here gathered together in His name, meekly kneeling upon your knees.'

"In the present form there is no such recognition of a congregation, besides those who are about to communicate; yet there is, I repeat, nothing to indicate their departure before the close of the service."

"Mr. Blunt wrote to me, requesting my direction, 'where the pause is to be made,' in order that non-communicants may depart. He stated that he had long been accustomed not to make any pause until the end of the exhortation, 'Dearly beloved in the Lord.' His reasons were that the exhortation is, not to communicate in an improper state of mind—that it is a fearful thing to receive unworthily; nevertheless, if a person were moved by the exhortation to feel that he ought not to communicate, the shame of exposing his own sense of his own unworthiness by withdrawing, when none but communicants remain, might tempt him to resist his awakened conscience; that such an evil would be prevented, if the congregation continued in the church till the conclusion of the exhortation, when any person who felt himself unfit to communicate might retire, unnoticed, with the rest."

"My answer appears to have been as follows: 'Departure of non-communicants. The reason you give I warmly assent to, for encouraging them not to depart until after the exhortation. Its fitness is specially indicated by the address following 'Ye that do,' STAT. 3 & 4 &c.' (I may here observe that it accords with the rubric in the order of communion of Edward VI., 'Here the priest shall pause a while, to see if any man will withdraw himself.') VICT. c. 86.

"On this answer*, Mr. Blunt has founded his justification of the course taken by him. He says, 'This was the bishop's resolution of the doubt;' and 'henceforth it was his duty, and that of his congregation, to obey it.' He 'told them of the bishop's decision—explained it to them—and encouraged them to comply with it.' Such is his answer to the charge made against him on this particular."

"That charge is stated above; and it appears by the clearest evidence, that instead of encouraging the congregation to remain until after the exhortation, as I had authorized him to do, he used my letter as his authority for declaring that he never would give the communion to any one who should leave the church before the exhortation. It further appears, that on the first of September last, he made this declaration in very vehement language, and under great excitement—in a manner which could not fail greatly to disturb the feelings of his congregation, and to disqualify them from partaking of the blessed sacrament, which he was then about to administer, in that state of quietude and composure, which alone befit so solemn an occasion."

"On this matter my judgment cannot but be most strongly against Mr. Blunt. I blame him for rashness of no ordinary kind, and with little or no excuse. I blame him for his unreasonable use of the sanction given to him by his bishop for edification, not for destruction. I blame him for the fearful, though I would hope, temporary rent made on that day, between him and his people. I blame him for driving, God only knows how many, meek and pious Christians from the table of the Lord. I blame him for alienating from himself and his ministry many whom his talents and zeal and piety might, with God's blessing, have attached to him and to their church. I blame him for hardening others, be they many or few, whose factious and schismatical temper might, indeed, have been proof against all the exertions of the meekest and most long-suffering minister—but who would not, in that case, have been able to plead their justification in the violence of him, the special duty of whose office it is, 'not to strive, but to be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth; and that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will.'

"From a subject so distressing I gladly turn to other matter."

"6. 'The refusal to read the Lord's Prayer with, or to administer the holy communion to, a man who had been baptized by a Roman catholic priest, the man having previously

* ["This answer was evidently not intended as an order. The matter is one of discretion; and the experience of this case seems to indicate, that the non-communicants are not likely to be content to remain so long as Mr. Blunt was authorized to encourage them to stay." Ex relat. the Bishop of Exeter.] communicated in our church, and being unwilling that the sacrament should be repeated.'

"This is a very grave charge: to refuse to pray with a dying member of the church, (as this party is here stated to be,) and to administer the holy communion to him, would not only expose any clergyman to the just indignation of all who heard of such misconduct, but would also make him liable to very heavy ecclesiastical censures, which the bishop would deem it his imperative duty to inflict.

"But what has appeared on the investigation? The main allegation, that 'the man had previously communicated in our church,' was at once abandoned. Not a word was said to justify the statement in this prime particular. Yet the whole charge rested on it. If the dying man was not a member of the church, it was the duty of the minister to decline either to administer the sacrament to him, or to pray with him, as with a member of the church. To pray for him, and in his presence, was, indeed, even then, Mr. Blunt's duty—a duty which there is no reason to doubt he discharged faithfully and earnestly. After all, the refusal to read the Lord's Prayer amounted to this—that in conversation with Blake, explaining to him the difference between catholic and schismatic, Mr. Blunt incidentally said, that 'a catholic could not properly use the Lord's Prayer with a schismatic.' There was no direct refusal.

"It may be right to add, that the office for 'the visitation of the sick' cannot with propriety be used towards a schismatic. If this were otherwise doubtful, all doubt would be removed by the terms of one of the prayers—'Preserve and continue this sick member in the unity of the church.'

"Whether this man, Blake, had been baptized, is somewhat doubtful—there is only the presumption which arises from his own statement, that 'his parents were careful people, and that he had been confirmed by a Romanist bishop in Ireland.'

"But supposing him to have been baptized, as such baptism was administered by a schismatic, it did not, of itself, make the man a member of the church. And the point for Mr. Blunt to be satisfied upon, before he could lawfully give the holy communion, was, whether he was a member of the church. If not, what was necessary to make him such? Mr. Blunt offered to baptize him conditionally. This Blake refused; not because of his 'not being satisfied of the necessity or propriety of a repetition of the sacrament,' as is affirmed in the 'causes of complaint;' for it appears that he was, at first, ready to receive conditional baptism—and more than this, that he was anxious that his daughter, who had received baptism from an Irish Romanist priest, should be, and she accordingly was baptized conditionally by Mr. Blunt; but, 'because he had been confirmed by an Irish Romanist bishop, and Irish Romanists considered the repetition or denial of such confirmation a most grievous sin.' Was this man to be deemed and dealt with as a member of our church? Did he renounce the schism in which he was born, and for many years had lived? If not, Mr. Blunt was bound, however reluctantly, to refuse to give the holy communion to him. Much as I lament this case of Blake, I cannot hesitate to sanction Mr. Blunt's decision.

"But the 'Causes of complaint,' a paper, of which I must say that it appears to have been drawn with much less of candour than might be expected on such an occasion, carries the case further. It says, that 'on Blake's expressing a hope to Mr. Blunt, that he would bury him, he declared he could not do so, unless he was rebaptised.'

"Now, what was the real fact? Mr. Blunt sought to avoid wounding the sick man's feelings: instead of making any declaration on the subject, or endeavouring to use it as a threat to prevail on him to be baptized, he for a long time declined answering the question at all, and it was not until after many days of earnest entreaty, that he did at length answer—being desirous that Blake's decision respecting his baptism should be made on higher grounds. All this was told by him to Mr. Hill and others at the time; yet it is now dragged forth, and thus distorted, in order to swell the catalogue of the charges against him.

"Whether Mr. Blunt adopted the best mode of testing Blake's fitness and disposition to be brought into the church by thus urging on him, against his will, conditional baptism, is a question which forms no part of the present inquiry. Whether he ever to bury Blake, if he died without renouncing the Romanist schism, and without seeking admission into the church, is also a question on which I am not now called upon to give an opinion.

"But I must not dismiss the subject altogether without saying, though I do not suspect the slightest intention to misrepresent, that Mr. Blunt has not cited any authority, as it was given to him, quite satisfactorily. He says that I only told him, that 'if the man was willing to be conditionally baptized he might very properly administer such baptism to him.' Now, this would have been a very insufficient answer to a clergyman asking his bishop how he was to act in a certain case.

"The truth is, that Mr. Blunt, after stating the case, proposed two questions: '1st. Am I right in supposing that baptism and confirmation in the Romish schism in England or Ireland do not admit to the holy catholic church?' '2nd. Am I right in supposing that in such a case as that above-mentioned the proper mode of admission is conditional baptism?'

"The first of these questions being a general question, involving an important point of theology, was not proper to be answered on such an occasion.

"The second, under the appearance of being particular, was in truth much too large in its terms. Such a case as that above-mentioned might be, and was not unlikely to be, construed very loosely.

"I therefore thought it necessary to confine my answer to the one case actually before me, and according to the aspect in which it was presented to me. Now, Mr. Blunt stated in his letter to me, that 'there is no evidence that the poor man has received baptism in a right form, or even baptism at all.' This was a position to which I could not absolutely assent, after reading what Mr. Blunt had written respecting the man's own declarations. But he had questioned the man, and I had not; he had stated, that the man 'knows not where or when he was baptized.' I therefore did not think myself called upon, even if I were in a condition, to controvert Mr. Blunt's conclusion respecting the absence of all evidence that Blake had been baptized. For this reason, and because I understood that the man himself wished to be baptized, I rested my answer on this one particular. 'In respect to the sick man whom you mention, and who is, I conclude, desirous of baptism, and found by you fit for admission to that sacrament, I think you may very properly use the conditional form of baptism towards him.

"I think this a sufficient answer to direct your practice in this case; and I decline unnecessarily to answer a general question."

"7. 'The refusal to bury the corpse of a young man, who had been baptized by a dissenting minister, in a colony where no church minister was to be found.'

"The real fact turns out to have been, that the deceased had been baptized by a Wesleyan minister in London.

"But this charge is somewhat varied in the 'Causes of complaint'—where it is expressed as follows:—'for refusing to bury any person not baptized by a minister of the established church, in open defiance of the settled law of the land.'

"It would be prudent, and, on the part of one who accuses his minister before his bishop, it is demanded by higher considerations than prudence, that before that minister be charged with acting 'in open defiance of the settled law of the land,' his accuser, especially if he be himself a lawyer, should first ascertain what 'the settled law of the land' really is.

"Up to this day nothing further is the 'settled law' on the subject, than that a minister is bound to bury the corpse of an infant baptized by a layman.

"Whether he would be so bound to bury the corpse even of an infant baptized by a heretic or schismatic is not yet 'the settled law of the land;' for that very question is now awaiting the decision of the supreme court of appeal, the judicial committee of her majesty's Privy Council.

"But if that question be there decided against the minister, the decision will not apply to the case in which Mr. Blunt refused to bury—namely, the case of an adult who, having been baptized by a schismatic, lived to the years of discretion, himself a schismatic, and died without having been made a member of the church.

"The complaints made against Mr. Blunt in this, and the immediately preceding instance, constitute grave 'doubts, concerning the manner, how to understand, do, and execute, the things contained in the Book of Common Prayer.' And, as these doubts have been attended with much warmth of language and bitterness, I fear, of feeling, they call on me 'by my discretion to take order for the quieting and appeasing of the same,' as directed by the preface 'concerning the service of the church.'

"I now resolve these doubts by saying, that neither the office 'for the visitation of the sick,' nor that 'for the burial of the dead,' ought to be used for an adult who, having been baptized in schism, and having lived a schismatic, has never been admitted into the church.

"So far as concerns 'the visitation of the sick,' the words already cited sufficiently prove this; and, surely, if the party be not admissible to the benefit of that office, he cannot be entitled to the office of burial. He could not be so entitled, even if the tone and tenour of the office itself were less conclusive than they are. But who can read the prayers in that office, and think them fit to be used over the body of one who, when living, never was admitted, nor sought to be admitted, into the church?

"Can the church consistently say, that they 'are departed hence in the Lord,' who were not members of his body? Can she number them among the 'faithful?' (a phrase specially appropriated to those who are in full communion with the church,) or speak of them, even in the language of hope, as having 'departed in the true faith of Christ's holy name?'

"To decline so to abuse the offices of the church implies no want of charity—no presumptuous denial of the ultimate blessedness of the deceased. We leave them to their and our most merciful Judge, confident that He, who knoweth what is in man, will make all due allowances for the sins and errors of all his creatures, whether they die within his church, or without its pale. But to attempt to break down the pale itself, is an act of presumption which no faithful minister will dare to commit—no humble minded Christian, when duly informed, will persist in asking.

"After all, what is there of hardship in the case? Can they who, while they live, repudiate our communion, complain, that, when dead, they will not be treated as if they had lived within it?

"8. 'The refusal to marry persons, unless they could prove satisfactorily that they have been baptized.'

"It appears that Mr. Blunt requires no further proof that the parties had been baptized than their own declaration.

"In the paper entitled 'Causes of complaint,' this grievance is abandoned, and another is substituted: that in a particular case, 'Mr. Blunt having discovered, after the first publication of banns, that one of the parties had never been baptized, refused to proceed with the publication.' This statement was proved to be not correct. He offered to proceed with the banns; but as he had informed the unbaptized party that he should not marry him, the banns were withdrawn, and the parties were married before the registrar.

"That Mr. Blunt would have been right in refusing to solemnize the marriage of these

STAT. 3 & 4
VICT. c. 86.

STAT. 3 & 4
VICT. c. 86.

parties, if their banns had not been withdrawn, is not so clear as he has regarded it.

"There seems, indeed, little doubt, that before the last review of the Book of Common Prayer, no minister could have used this 'form of solemnization of matrimony' in such a case; because the communion was part of the form itself, and it was expressly enjoined in the rubric that 'the new married persons, the same day of their marriage, must receive the holy communion.' In the present book, the rubric does not require absolutely that the communion be received by the parties, but is content with declaring the fitness of their so receiving—'It is convenient that the new married persons should receive the holy communion at the time of their marriage.'

"This may have left the minister at liberty to decline using the office, if either of the parties were disabled from receiving the holy communion; and if he were at liberty, it might have been ordinarily the better way to refuse to use the office in such case, so long as the use of it was not necessary to the validity of marriage, in other words, before the first Marriage Act, 26th Geo. 2, c. 33. But that act having made the use of this form absolutely necessary to the valid marriage of all, (except Quakers and Jews,) the minister ceased to be at liberty to refuse.

"It may be argued—I do not say that the argument would be conclusive—that the late Marriage Act, 6th & 7th Gul. 4, c. 83, permitting marriages to be entered into before the registrars, has restored to the minister liberty to refuse solemnizing matrimony, if either of the parties cannot communicate; and that, if he be at liberty, it may be his duty to refuse. But if he refuse, it must be before he publishes the banns; for by the 26th Geo. 2, c. 33, s. 1, it is enacted, that 'in all cases, where banns shall have been published, the marriage shall be solemnized in one of the parish churches or chapels, where such banns shall have been published, and in no other place whatever.' And this provision of the first Marriage Act remains unrepealed.

"These are all the complaints which were transmitted to me in Mr. Hill's letter of the 12th of September. But there is a matter, on which one of the witnesses seems to have commented, as a part of Mr. Blunt's irregular conduct—and on which much has been said by others—I mean the unpleasant occurrence at the archdeacon's last visitation at Helston. In this particular, I do not think that any blame attaches to Mr. Blunt; and, in order to show the view taken by me of his conduct, I subjoin a copy of my letter on the occasion to the archdeacon.

"June 14, 1844.

"My dear Archdeacon,—Having given attention to the principal circumstances stated in your letter of the 12th, and as the same post brought to me letters on the same subject, from Mr. Blunt and Canon Rogers, I conclude that I may consider the whole case to be before me. In relation to any authority from me in this case, it is right that I should say, in the first instance, (so far as my memory, in the absence of letters, permits me,) what has been the extent of my communications to Mr. Blunt. Originally, on his offering himself for a curacy in this diocese, he told me that he could not conscientiously accept any charge in which he was not at liberty to follow out all the directions of the rubric. I gave him, without hesitation, as assurance that he should have such liberty; and I applauded the high feeling and principle which prompted the demand.

"I added, if I mistake not, that in every instance in which any of my clergy should express similar determination to follow strictly the requirements of the church, he should have my full support, though I did not deem it necessary to give a general order for relaxing those usages, and the observance of the rubrics which had fallen into desuetude. I further said, that I permitted him, as I had permitted another, and as I am ready to permit any one who may seek the permission, to use my name as ordering the observance in this case—provided this should be deemed important as a protection against the resistance of the parishioners. You will see, then, that Mr. Blunt has a right to say that he acts by my authority, and, if he thinks necessary, my order for the faithful observance of all the rubrics. So far as there is no doubt what the direction of the rubric may be in any particular point, he is not only justified in adhering to himself on all occasions, but also in requiring it to be adhered to by others, as a condition of his permission to perform any part of his duty in his church. It is distressing to me to find that the assertion of this right, and the acting on this principle, have brought him into collision with any of his brethren in the clergy; above all, with his archdeacon at his visitation. But I cannot and do not blame him. If he had required that the preacher at my visitation should adhere to the practice introduced by him of strict adherence to the rubric, I should have sustained him in his requisition. The day on which the visitation was held was, it appears, the festival of St. Barnabas. On that day the church order that the communion service be read, and assigns a certain place in that service for the sermon, with certain other portions of the service to follow it. If Mr. Blunt insisted on this, and no more than this, I think that under the circumstances of his case—especially considering the practice he had succeeded in establishing in his church, with the good-will and concurrence of his parishioners—he exercised a reasonable discretion. I will not willingly go into all particulars. The general question is that which is alone worthy of discussion; because, as I understood the case, it was the general claim of Mr. Blunt, that the preacher should follow the rubric, as observed by Mr. Blunt, which was, in effect, disputed.

"I am, my dear Archdeacon,

"Yours very faithfully,

"H. EXETER

"Venerable Archdeacon Sheepshanks"

"I have now considered the reasons for the alleged dissatisfaction of the parishioners of Helston with Mr. Blunt, their minister, stated in Mr. Hill's letter to me of the 12th ultimo.

"There remain some others, which are contained in a paper delivered by him to the commissioners, under the title of 'Causes of Complaint on the part of the Church at Helston against the Curate.'

"The most important of these I have already incidentally examined, in connexion with what has preceded.

"1. (Case of Blake, already disposed of.)

"2. 'For frequently addressing the congregation from the pulpit, before the sermon, in a vehement and unbecoming manner, respecting the changes he had made, and purposed to make, in the mode of performing the services of the church.'

"Upon this it does not appear that the slightest proof was tendered. I must therefore regard it as unfounded.

"3. (The case of publication of banns, in which one of the parties had never been baptised: considered already.)

"4. 'For compelling women coming to be churchd to submit to the exposure and fatigue of kneeling at the rails of the communion table, where he reads the service, instead of permitting them to remain in the seat appropriated for the purpose, and performing the service in the ordinary manner.'

"It does not appear that any complaints had been made on the part of any women who had been churchd on this account. On the contrary, evidence was adduced to show that no dissatisfaction had existed; and it was stated by Mr. Blunt, in answer to an inquiry put to him, that 'the number of churchings had immensely increased' since the practice of performing this office at the communion table had been introduced.

"I will remark on this matter, that the rubric directs 'that the woman shall kneel down in some convenient place, as hath been accustomed, or as the ordinary shall direct.'

"At Helston, it seems that recently the place of kneeling for 'the women to be churchd' has been changed by the churchwardens; it does not appear by what authority.

"If no special cause be shown to the contrary, I, as ordinary, appoint that they kneel at the rails of the communion table, as being most conducive to reverence and solemnity in the performance of the office, and as being also the place designated by the phrase in the rubric, 'as hath been accustomed.'

"That this is the meaning of the rubric is manifest from what passed at the Savoy conference (holden by the king's authority to review the Book of Common Prayer previously to the Act of Uniformity, 1661). The rubric in the former book stood thus: 'The woman shall come into the church, and there shall kneel down in some convenient place, nigh unto the place where the table standeth, and the priest standing by her shall say,' &c.

"To this the exception taken was, 'In regard that the women's kneeling near the table is, in many churches, inconvenient, we desire that these words may be left out, and that the minister may perform that service either in the desk or pulpit.' Cardwell's Conferences, 334.

"The bishops answered, 'It is fit that the woman performing especial service of thanksgiving should have a special place for it, where she may be perspicuous to the whole congregation, and near the holy table, in regard of the offering she is there to make. They need not fear popery in this, since in the church of Rome she is to kneel at the church door.' Ibid. 362.

"This proves that the present rubric was intended at once to retain generally the practice of kneeling near the table, 'as was accustomed,' and to admit of consideration of special reasons of inconvenience in particular churches, for which the ordinary is empowered to provide.

"5. 'For dismissing the church singers, and substituting in their stead some of the national school boys, wholly ignorant of music, and who being placed in the chancel, at the greatest possible distance from the organ, are quite beyond the control of the organist, whereby the solemn and devotional effect of this part of the service is entirely destroyed.'

"The notes of evidence, sent to me by the commissioners, state that 'Mr. Blunt says they were dismissed by the churchwardens; but Mr. Clarke, one of the churchwardens, is positive that they were dismissed by Mr. Blunt.' A marginal note is appended in these words: 'They seem to have been dismissed by the concurrence of the churchwardens. E. B.'

"It happens that I have a letter from Mr. Blunt, dated so long ago as the 1st of March last, which seems fully to confirm the opinion here expressed. Mr. Blunt wrote thus: 'With the help of the churchwardens, I am forming a voluntary double choir, to be placed in the chancel, instead of a most ill-behaved set of paid singers, which are an annoyance to the whole congregation. The present prayer desk is a second pulpit. It would be very advisable to remove this, and place one in the choir, looking south. May I do this, if the churchwardens sanction it?'

"I am glad that I retained a copy of my answer to this letter. The following is what refers to the passage just cited:

"'Voluntary double choir. I highly approve it, if you have ascertained that your parishioners have sense enough not to fancy it popish.

"'Do nothing new, unless required by the church, which your congregation will not willingly concur in.'

"It is quite plain, therefore, that Mr. Blunt did not, of his own mere motion, and without the concurrence of the churchwardens, 'dismiss the church singers, and substitute boys, &c., who, being placed in the chancel, are quite beyond all control of the organist.' Whether the experiment was wise, and whether it succeeded, or not, is a matter not necessarily connected with this inquiry. But I think it right to say that the testimony of the organist proves that the school boys were much better placed in the chancel, near to the minister, than in the gallery, where they were under no effectual supervision.

"I also think it right to add, that a complaint of this sort, and on this subject, comes

STAT. 3 & 4
VICT. c. 86.

STAT. 3 & 4
VICT. c. 86.

with an extremely ill grace from Mr. Hill, who took upon himself, in the character of churchwarden, to remove the seats from the chancel, and so force the school-boys back into the gallery, on the 5th of this month, while this inquiry was going on; and persisted in doing so after he had been reminded by me, that as his colleague had made the declaration required by the statute, and he himself had not, he was in law, and therefore in fact, not churchwarden.

"6. ('In refusing to bury,' &c., already considered.)

"7. 'For tendering to the churchwardens for their signature, conjointly with his own, a notice, to be published, to the effect, that no dissenter should be buried in the churchyard before the hour of eight in the evening, which the churchwardens refused to sign.'

"This complaint seems to me to be made without that fair explanation which the proposed notice, on the face of it, presents. It may, indeed, be thought that a mere abortive proposal, for the purpose of meeting a great practical evil, hardly merited a place in a formal catalogue of grievances. But if it did, yet common candour demanded, that instead of thus intimating that the notice was directed against 'dissenters,' as dissenters, the complainant should have stated, that it was not directed against any particular class or description of persons; but that, in terms of courtesy and charity, it professed deep regret that 'the conduct of certain parties, in repeatedly interfering with the church's services, and otherwise infringing the church's laws, had compelled the minister and churchwardens to make the rule.'

"I think it right to remark also, that the date of the notice, the 3rd of July, removes much of the seeming harshness of the proposal; 8 o'clock is not, at that season of the year, an hour of unseemly lateness, for mere interment, without any service at the grave. It required no extraordinary degree of charity to presume that it was designed to vary the hour with the season of the year.

"8 and 9. ('For requiring the whole of the congregation to remain in church,' &c.; and 'for having, on Sunday, the 1st of September,' &c. already considered.)

"I have thus patiently waded through the long list of grievances stated to me, and the evidence and documents adduced on both sides. I have done this at greater length, and with more of minuteness, than might perhaps have been expected, or might even seem to have been demanded by the nature (of many at least) of the matters complained of. But I have submitted to this most distasteful task, because I feel the deep importance to the people, not only of Helston, but of other places to which the knowledge of the case cannot have failed to reach, and to the clergy of the whole of my diocese, that I should testify my firm determination, to the utmost of my power, and in reliance on God's blessing, so to exercise the authority which has been intrusted to me, as shall on the one hand preserve the service of the church from being invaded by rash and unauthorized innovation, and on the other, protect the conscientious ministers of the church from being overborne in their honest and faithful endeavours to carry out the requirements of the Book of Common Prayer in all their integrity.

"On this occasion I have, unhappily, seen very much indeed to deplore. On the part of the curate of Helston (among minor errors I have witnessed one instance of most culpable indiscretion, indiscretion which has carried with it its own appropriate and very heavy punishment, by most seriously impairing his usefulness, by robbing him, it may be feared, of much of the confidence and attachment of the best of his people, even of those whose respect he had already begun to acquire by qualifications of no common order, and must otherwise have largely increased; above all, by encouraging, and in some measure justifying, a clamour against him, which has issued in the present distressing, I am afraid I might add humiliating, investigation. But this punishment, thank God, is temporary, and will tend, we may hope, to chasten and purify that zeal, which, accompanied as I doubt not it is, by high principle, as well as by devoted attachment to the duties of his ministry, will enable him, with God's blessing, to be yet a most useful labourer in the Lord's vineyard, even at Helston.

"I say, even at Helston; for I would not inflict on those whose opposition to him has been not only bitter, but in some particulars manifestly unjust, the cutting self-reproach which, if not immediately, yet very soon, they could not fail to experience, if they should be permitted to succeed in driving him with ignominy, and with the destruction of his prospects of usefulness, from a place which already owes to him a debt of gratitude, however partially cancelled, which he is well qualified hereafter most largely to increase.

"When, indeed, I look back at the catalogue of grievances, and see how few of them have been sustained by proofs, and how much fewer have been worthy even of being exposed; when I then remember who it is that brought them forward, a principal inhabitant of one of the principal towns in Cornwall, an honoured member of a profession which must have peculiarly qualified him to estimate the value of the charges he was adducing, and the weight of the evidence he had to support them; a sincere and honest churchman too, who, as such, has long given liberally of his time and talents, as well as of his pecuniary means, to support the cause of the church at Helston; I cannot ascribe to unworthy motives, that conduct, which in a less honourable man, it would be difficult to ascribe to any other. I see in it rather a proof of the lamentable delusion, in many instances little short of infatuation, which can discern nothing but popery in every endeavour to restore sound church principles, the surest barrier against popery, and even to fulfil with diligence and faithfulness the obligations entered into at ordination.

"One more astounding instance of the infatuation, and only one, I have indeed witnessed, and that is the instance to which Mr. Hill himself refers in the beginning of his letter to me of the 12th of September. 'Matters at Helston,' he says, 'have been hastened to a crisis by the publication in a dissenting newspaper of a letter, conceived in an intemperate and grossly offensive spirit, the authorship of which rumour attaches, I grieve to say, to a churchman and clergyman of the established church. I enclose a copy for your lordship's perusal, and I can scarcely bring myself to think that your lordship will be greatly surprised at discovering marks of dissatisfaction among the laity of the town, when a clergyman of another deanery considers himself called on to make strictures on a brother priest in the public prints. I will not draw the inference which many do from the publication of that letter—"that Mr. Blunt must be deserving of episcopal censure, otherwise no clergyman could be found to condemn him in such unmeasured terms."'

"Public rumour was not wrong. At the demand of Mr. Blunt's attorney, the editor gave up his correspondent—a clergyman, an aged clergyman—one, who having long retired from the active duties of his ministry, lives in opulence and good repute at a distance of many miles from Helston. This clergyman, hitherto respected and beloved for his benevolence, for the amenity of his manners, for his general unwillingness to think evil, or to do evil, has been hurried by his horror of a surplice (!) into a bitterness of invective, which a practised libeller would have had the wisdom to avoid. Would that this were all! Not only has charity been forgotten, and candour, and decent attention to facts and evidence, nay, and honesty in citing a document on which he affected to comment, but even the most solemn engagements made at the most solemn epoch of his life. His ordination vows are flung by him to the winds. He had promised at God's table, as one of the conditions of his priesthood, that 'he would, the Lord being his helper, reverently obey his ordinary, and other chief ministers of the church, and them to whom the charge and government over him is committed, following with a glad mind and will their godly admonitions, and submitting himself to their godly judgments.' He keeps this promise by sending a series of anonymous letters to a newspaper notorious for the violence of its hostility to the church, arraigning his bishop in terms the most offensive, because that bishop, judging on cases duly brought before him for his judgment, pronounced one clergyman blameless, who had acted on the liberty which rubrics and canons expressly gave to him, and refused to censure another for adhering to his own just sense of his own duty.

"Again, this aged clergyman, who on the same awful occasion, and under the same solemn adjuration, had vowed to 'maintain and set forwards, as much as lieth in him, quietness, peace, and love, among all Christian people,' has had recourse to the same vehicle of mischief, in order to inflame the minds of the whole population of a considerable town against their pastor, snatching greedily at every silly and every calumnious tale, and giving to them the currency of his own smart writing, and whatever authority they might derive from his own loudly-whispered name, thus glorying in the shame of getting up a miserable agitation against a curate—a solitary and almost unknown and unfriended curate, intrusted with the charge of more than three thousand souls. May He who knows the folly of the wisest, and the weakness of the best of His poor creatures, judge with mercy this awful dereliction of all that we had a right to look for in such a man! It is for us, not to judge, but to deplore—to take warning from his temporary fall—to 'mourn over him, saying, alas! my brother.'

"But I return to my proper subject, and shall conclude with calling on Mr. Blunt to be more cautious than he has hitherto been; especially to avoid all extempore addresses from the pulpit—a practice not safe to any man, but most hazardous to a fervid and zealous mind like his. Let him be content with performing the worship of God according to the real ordinances of our church, in all their fulness if he will, but also in all their simplicity and all their purity. Let him avoid all unauthorized innovation, above all that worst species of innovation, the revival of bygone usages, not ordered by the church, which are associated in the minds of the people with the remembrance of the superstitions and corruptions of Rome. This, indeed, is not even charged against him.

"In the course of this investigation we have seen much of violence and unseemly provocation on both sides—too much, certainly, to allow either party to look back upon it with feelings of exultation, as on a triumph over an opponent.

"Yet it can be, and I trust will be, made by both an occasion of a far better triumph—a triumph over prejudices, temper, passions—over feelings, natural it may be, but surely not on that account less requiring that they be subdued.

"Instead of perpetuating strife by publishing statements and counterstatements, let me express my hope, or rather my earnest entreaty—an entreaty which churchmen will not on such an occasion suffer their bishop to address to them in vain—that as far as is possible all may be forgotten—every document suppressed—this my judgment with the rest.

"Let the parties mainly concerned mutually forgive, and not trouble themselves or others by considering who has most to forgive. There has been great misunderstanding on the part of the parishioners, and some injustice in consequence of that misunderstanding. There has been great indiscretion on the part of Mr. Blunt, too, fully accounting for the resistance and hostility which he has met with. They now know each other better, and will return to the feelings which become the sacred connexion of a pastor with his people.

"May their future contests be contests of love—who shall most faithfully serve, and, under the divine blessing, most largely advance, the only cause which can long be worth their contending for—'glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men.'"

Letter from the Bishop of Exeter to a portion of the Inhabitants of Falmouth, in reply to a Memorial addressed by them to his Lordship.

"Bishopstowe, Torquay, June 30, 1843.

"Gentlemen, — I yesterday received a packet, containing a letter from you, a copy of resolutions passed at a meeting convened by you, and a memorial numerously signed by persons calling themselves 'The congregation of the parish church of Falmouth,' which memorial states that 'within the last twelve months various alterations have been introduced in the mode of celebrating service in their church, which, in their opinion, in a great measure destroy the beautiful simplicity and spiritual character of the reformed religion, and assimilate the ceremonies of our church to those of the Romish hierarchy.' The memorialists, therefore, 'pray that I will examine into those recent changes, and issue such directions as shall induce the rector to restore the services to what they were before he commenced his ministry among them.'

"The memorial states no particulars of the changes into which it prays me to examine. But the resolutions enumerate certain matters, designating them as 'grievances,' into which I proceed, as requested, 'to examine.'

"They are as follows:—

"'1. The chanting of Amen — of the Psalter — of the Creeds.'

"'2. The repeated bowings to the altar.'

"'3. The display of sacramental plate thereon.'

"Of the first of these things, the chanting, one of the resolutions states, that it 'has rendered the Psalter and the Creeds almost unintelligible to the congregation,' that is, to the memorialists, 'and especially to the poorer and juvenile members thereof.'

"Now this is to me, I frankly avow, very surprising. Psalms are spiritual songs, and therefore it surely is fit that they be sung or chanted, which I need not say is only a simpler mode of singing, and in which even those who have no skill in music may join. The psalm which precedes the rest in morning prayer, commences, as the memorialists well know, with the words, 'O come let us sing unto the Lord.' The apostle Paul had no apprehension that singing made the matter sung unintelligible, for, after saying to the Colossians, 'Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom,' he immediately adds, as a mode of effecting this, 'teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord.' Accordingly, the church of Christ, in the earliest and purest ages, was in the habit of doing what the apostle enjoined; the singing of psalms, especially the Psalms of David and the other inspired psalmists, was always a large portion of the worship of God. Our own church, at the Reformation, followed the course presented in holy scripture, and pursued by the primitive church, without being afraid of doing this because it was also done at Rome. Nor did the apprehension of thus making 'this part of the service unintelligible,' even occur to them. For, in prescribing the rubrical directions for the performance of this part, they expressly say, 'these shall be said or sung.' Now, what Crammer, Ridley, and other martyred fathers of the Reformation who composed our Liturgy, permitted in plain terms, and sanctioned by their practice, I can hardly be expected to forbid, as rendering the service 'unintelligible.' If, indeed, the congregation at Falmouth differ herein from the congregations of other towns, not superior to it in intellectual advancement or general refinement, and happens, from whatever cause, to dislike chanting, and will be content to ask their rector to gratify them by discontinuing it, and shall do this in a tone of ordinary courtesy and kindness, I cannot doubt that he will most readily comply. If he do not, (which I do not anticipate as possible,) they may then very reasonably call on me to interpose.

"Under this head of chanting, I had almost forgotten to notice creeds; (I do not forget, but absolutely refuse to notice the Amen.) Now, the creeds are already fully understood, or supposed to be understood, by those who recite them, whether they be said or sung. The chanting of creeds, therefore, cannot reasonably be an objection as 'rendering that part of the service unintelligible.' I turn to other matters.

"2. The next is the frequent 'bowings to the altar.' These bowings may or may not be proper; and you give me no intimation whatever which may assist me in discovering in which description they are to be placed.

"They may be merely those bowings which are commanded by the 18th Canon of 1603, which command, with the annexed reason, I here subjoin for the edification of yourselves and of the other memorialists.

"'When in time of divine service the Lord Jesus shall be mentioned, due and lowly reverence shall be done by all persons present, as it hath been accustomed; testifying by these outward ceremonies and gestures their inward humility, christian resolution, and our acknowledgment that the Lord Jesus Christ, the true and eternal Son of God, is the only Saviour of the world; in whom alone all the mercies, graces, and promises of God to mankind for this life and the life to come, are fully and wholly comprised.'

"That the reverence here enjoined was indeed accustomed is manifest from the 52nd of the injunctions of Queen Elizabeth, in the first year of her reign, (which injunctions were subsequently recognised in an act of parliament,) 'That whosoever the name of Jesus shall be in any lesson, sermon, or otherwise, in the church pronounced, due reverence be made of all persons, young and old, with lowliness of courtesy as themselves doth necessarily belong, and heretofore hath been accustomed.'

"Need I remind you of a higher authority than kings and queens, acts of parliament, or canons of synods, the hallowed usage of even the word of God itself? 'He became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Whereunto God hath highly exalted

Him, and given Him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth.' Now, if such be the 'bowings' of which the memorialists complain, as destroying the beautiful simplicity and spiritual character of the reformed religion, and assimilating our services to those of Rome, I, as their bishop, am bound to deplore and to endeavour to remove their unhappy blindness.

"Again, 'the bowings to the altar' may be the bowings recommended in the seventh canon of the Synod of 1640*, which says that, 'Whereas the church is the house of God, dedicated to His holy worship, and therefore ought to mind us both of the greatness and goodness of His divine majesty; certain it is that the acknowledgment thereof, not only inwardly in our hearts, but also outwardly in our bodies, must needs be pious in itself, profitable unto us, and edifying unto others. We therefore think it very meet and behoveful, and heartily commend it to all good and well affected people, members of this church, that they be ready to tender unto the Lord the said acknowledgment, by doing reverence and obeisance, both at the coming in and going out of the said churches, according to the most ancient custom of the primitive church in the present time, and of this church also for many years of the reign of Queen Elizabeth. The reviving, therefore, of this ancient and laudable custom we heartily commend to the serious consideration of all people; not with any intention to exhibit any religious worship to the communion table, the east, or the church, or anything therein contained, in so doing, but only for the advancement of God's majesty, and to give Him alone that honour and glory that is due unto Him, and no otherwise.'

"Now, if 'the bowings to the altar,' enumerated among your 'grievances,' be of this kind, I must decline issuing any directions to the rector which may induce him to discontinue them. I do not understand that he attempts to impose them as duties on his people. He performs them, it seems, himself, thereby exercising his Christian liberty, with which I have no right nor inclination to interfere. I do not, indeed, practise this obeisance myself, 'in coming in and going out of church,' but I respect the freedom of others, and I from my heart subscribe to the wise and charitable language with which the canon last cited by me concludes: 'In the practice or omission of this rite, we desire that the rule of charity prescribed by the apostle may be observed, which is, that they which use this rite despise not them which use it not; and that they who use it not condemn not those who use it.' I have thus noticed the only 'bowing to the altar,' of which I have ever heard as practised by any minister or member of our church; of these, one it is the duty of your rector to perform, the other is recommended to him by one of the canons. If he practise any others, and if you offer any proof that they are of an improper character, I shall give to that proof my best attention. But, in the absence of all testimony, and even of direct allegation, that your rector's 'bowings' are thus improper, I must decline calling on him even to explain them.

"3. There remains the third and last of your 'grievances'—of the matters which you, and the other persons who passed the resolutions which you have transmitted to me, have the confidence to characterize as 'contrary to the principles of our reformed religion, and distressing to the consciences of the congregation.'

"It is, 'the display of the sacramental plate' on the Lord's table, at times (I suppose, though you do not state it,) when the holy communion is not celebrated.

"If this harmless, customary, and, in my opinion, seemingly usage, the exhibition of the sacramental plate to decorate the table of the Lord, and to testify man's wish to honour God's service with the choicest of his substance, had been deliberately thus characterized by some hundreds of persons, it would ["Rarely has one met with so extraordinary a misapprehension. To speak of an 'ecclesiastical person attempting to confirm' these, or any other 'canons,' is, on all principles hitherto recognised, absolutely unintelligible. The statute is not worded so absurdly as the learned master conceives. The words cited by him are part of a proviso, that 'the act shall not be construed to extend to give any archbishop or bishop or any other ecclesiastical judge, &c., or other person, &c., any authority to exercise any jurisdiction which, &c., nor to abridge or diminish the king's majesty's supremacy, nor to confirm the canons made in the year 1640:' that is, 'the act shall not be construed to extend,' inter alia, 'to confirm these canons'—or give to them the authority of parliament.

["The master proceeds gravely to argue on his own strange construction of this proviso, that 'if the custom of bowing in churches is sought to be justified by the sanction of these synodical enactments, it is a proceeding which the law appears positively to forbid, for it formally disallows them.' The clergyman 'is evidently an introducer of unauthorized ceremonies, and as such is liable to censure,' &c.

["Now so far is all this from being in accordance with our ecclesiastical law, that within a few months after the passing of the act, convocation appointed, more than once, a committee of bishops, to examine the Canons of 1640, and to declare which of them were in force, as being not contrary to the law of the land, and which were void, as being contrary to the same. (See Cardwell, Syn. 660, l. 5.) That the 7th Canon, which permits these bowings, is one of those which are void, never before seems to have occurred to any man.

be most painful to contemplate. But I am not so unjust, so uncharitable, or so blind, as to believe that words so palpably extravagant, and even inapplicable, have been deliberately adopted by the great majority of those who voted for the resolutions, or subscribed to the memorial. I would willingly hope, if it were possible, that they had been deliberately used by none, that they were hastily and thoughtlessly perused as well as subscribed. But glaring facts forbid me to entertain this hope. The bustle of long preparation, the parading of the whole procedure in requisitions, placards, and newspapers, force upon me the painful conviction, that there are at Falmouth persons so dead to the feelings which ought to warm and soften the heart of every one that 'nameth the name of Christ,' as to labour to call down public obloquy on a minister of God—their own minister—by the use of words which charity itself cannot believe them sincere in using on the occasion to which they applied them. 'The display of the sacramental plate' on the Lord's table—a display which is made almost in every church where the plate is worthy of being displayed—may, it seems, be described at Falmouth as 'contrary to the principles of our reformed religion, and distressing to the consciences of the congregation.' Certain of the professing Christians and members of the church in that town have, after much premeditation, solemnly declared this; and hundreds of others have, ignorantly or heedlessly, subscribed to it.

"As their bishop, I dare not forbear telling them all that they have all grievously sinned, although doubtless in different measures, in what they have thus done. Heedlessness can little extenuate in so plain a case, though malignity may have much aggravated the sinfulness which belongs to the proceeding itself. May God give them grace to see and to deplore their sin! Of one thing they may be sure, that they will not have seen, much less deplored and repented it—as they ought—till they recognise the sacred tie which binds them to their minister. If there be truth in God's word, 'The Holy Ghost hath made him an overseer over them to feed the church of God,' (Acts xxii. 28,) they are bound to 'know him as over them in the Lord, and to esteem him very highly in love for his work's sake.' (Thess. xii. 13.) He may have, and doubtless he has, as every one of us has, many faults. He may have acted on several occasions, as every one of us is liable to act, with imprudence, rashness, want of due consideration for the feelings or prejudices of others. He may even have exhibited these qualities in a more than ordinary degree (I know not that he has; certainly nothing brought to my notice on this occasion proves to me that he has). But he cannot have so conducted himself as to justify or to excuse the conduct which he has experienced from those who have borne any part in the transaction which I have been compelled thus to deal with. He is on the point of quitting his house and his parish, in search of bodily health to her who is most dear to him. For God's sake, for Christ's sake, for your own souls' sake, if you know what Christian love is, let not the pain of his absence for so afflicting a cause be embittered by the recollection that in his last lingering sojourn at Falmouth he was insulted, cruelly persecuted, foully maligned by those who ought to honour him as a father, while they mourn for him as a brother.

"I will say no more; I have said enough to those who have hearts to bleed, or consciences to feel. May God, in his mercy, pardon and finally accept us all for his dear Son's sake! May He hear and grant this, the humble and fervent prayer of one who is too conscious of his own manifold unworthiness, to dwell unnecessarily on the faults of others. I am, gentlemen, with the sincerest wishes for the spiritual and temporal good of yourselves, and of all who joined you in addressing me, your faithful friend and servant.

"The Churchwardens of Falmouth."

Pastoral Letter from the Bishop of Exeter to the Clergy of the Diocese of Exeter

"Bishopstowe, Nov. 19, 1844.

"Rev. and dear Brethren,—I address you on a subject of very deep interest to us all—the diversity of practice in the worship of Almighty God, which, in concurrence with other unhappy causes, has threatened to involve us in a state of painful, I had almost said perilous, disunion.

"That the mischief has not been felt so strongly in this diocese as in some others, while it calls for our especial thankfulness to Almighty God, may, we hope, be ascribed in no small measure to warm and steady attachment to the church on the part of the laity, and not less, I rejoice in thinking, to the general soberness and discretion of you, the clergy.

"But even here we are very far from being exempt from the common evil. There are parishes in Devonshire, and still more a Cornwall, in which grave misunderstandings have arisen between the minister and the people, from causes for which neither he nor they have been primarily responsible.

"Discussions of important principles in other parts of the church, though they found among us no vehement partisans on either side, have led, in several instances, to very painful results. While they have excited in many of the clergy a livelier sense of the responsibility imposed on them by their engagements to the church, and have made them solicitous to follow out its requisitions to their full extent; they have at the same time indisposed the laity to the reception of any change, by exhibiting too many instances of the fatal consequences of change, introduced, as it has elsewhere been, by private individuals, whether from simple desire of novelty, or as part of a systematic attempt to bring back our church nearer to the corrupt usages from which it was reformed.

"It was therefore actual experience of great, and pressing, and growing evils, which recently induced me to have recourse to the unusual, but strictly canonical, expedient of seeking the advice of those whose other and standing, and I may truly add, whose personal qualifications, pre-eminently fit them to form the council of their bishop.

"Sixteen members of the general chapter of the cathedral of Exeter, together with the Archdeacons of Totnes and Barnstaple, (the Archdeacon of Cornwall being unfortunately absent through illness,) met in the chapter room, and gave to me the benefit of their united deliberations. Another distinguished prebendary, (reluctantly detained by sickness,) sent to us his judgment, founded on long experience in one of the most populous and important districts in Cornwall.

"They were unanimous in deploring existing evils, and in apprehending greater, if some timely check be not applied. And, if they were not unanimous in advising what that check should be, this very want of unanimity gave to me the advantage of more fully hearing all that could be urged by able and experienced men on either side. After a discussion of three hours, more than two thirds of the whole number agreed in advising me, that the only proper, and, under God, the only effectual remedy, appeared to be, at once to restrain all undue change, and to look to the law as our sole guide. Of that law, the law of the whole church of England, including under that comprehensive term not the pastors and teachers alone, but the people also—that is, the state—of that law, one main and leading object, since the Reformation, has ever been to establish 'uniformity of public prayers, and administration of sacraments, and other rites and ceremonies.'

"This object, good in itself, becomes inestimable, when we look to the evils which it alone can prevent. But uniformity, it is manifest, can only be secured by laying down one rule. This the law has done. And, if process of time have introduced some relaxations in practice, issuing in the great evils we now deplore, it is a convincing proof that the true remedy for those evils must be sought in returning to a faithful observance of the Act of Uniformity.

"That act has, in truth, every claim a law can have, on the dutiful and cordial obedience of churchmen. Based on the soundest principles, recognising and declaring the Liturgy itself to be purely spiritual in its origin, and applying temporal sanctions only to enforce the use of it, this illustrious statute bears on it the character of a solemn compact; by which the church, having provided for the nation a pure form of Christian worship, received for that form the assured protection and support of the crown, and all the estates of the realm; a statute which, for this very reason, is holden to be 'essential and fundamental,' and is so declared to be in the great constitutional act, the Act of Union between the realms of England and Scotland.

"Now, I do not say, that every departure from any minute direction of the Book of Common Prayer, enshrined as it is in this fundamental law, deserves to be stigmatised as a violation of the national compact; but I say, that the duty of strict obedience to it cannot be too strongly felt by any—least of all, by the clergy. To this duty we pledged ourselves in our ordination vows. We renewed that pledge, as often as we undertook the cure of souls, or were otherwise admitted to serve in any office in the house of God. To the strict fulfilment, therefore, of that duty, no faithful minister of God's word will think it a hardship that his bishop should now recall him. He will, rather, gladly recognise the fitness of recurring to it, at a time of general doubt and difficulty, as the one, the only rule, by which our practice in public prayer can be honestly or safely regulated.

"And, while a willing and hearty obedience is thus confidently anticipated from the clergy, can we apprehend less ready acquiescence in the same course on the part of the laity? Assuredly not—provided that we previously instruct them in the nature of the changes introduced, and of the reason for which they are introduced—not from love of change, but to prevent change—to enable us, at length, to find a rest for ourselves amidst the fluctuation of usages around us, and to find it in strict obedience to the law.

"Need I add, that this very purpose of ensuring stability, as well as uniformity in our public worship, is the very end and object of the statute, as thus declared in its preamble—'In regard that nothing conduceth more to the settling of the peace of this nation, (which is desired of all good men,) nor to the honour of our religion and the propagation thereof, than an universal agreement in the public worship of Almighty God; and to the intent that every person within this realm may certainly know the rule to which he is to conform in public worship and administration of the sacraments, and other rites and ceremonies of the church of England.'

"For these reasons I scruple not to address you all in the language of most earnest entreaty—entreaty which I thankfully acknowledge, after the experience of fourteen years, you have never yet disregarded, but which I now put forth with far greater anxiety than I ever before testified—that you will all concur with me in discountenancing every attempt to divide us into parties, by rendering a steady, uniform, and peaceful obedience to the laws of the church, especially in all that relates to the public worship of Almighty God, as enjoined in the rubric of the Book of Common Prayer. If to this my earnest entreaty I add, as I am bound to add, the language of authority and order, you will, I am sure, see in it only the fuller sanction and support of your own desire to act in conformity with your own deep feeling of your duty.

"I abstain at present from entering into details. Let me, however, say that I advise a very cautious and forbearing tone in all that respects the duty of the laity, as laid down in the rubric. For instance—you are bound to read, at least, one sentence of the offertory whenever the communion service shall be read. But it is left to your discretion whether you should read more, in other words, whether you should enforce a collection.

"Now, in every church in which the congregation in general is prepared to regard the collection as the exercise of a high Christian privilege—the privilege of offering to God—of giving to him of his own—there I advise

STAT. 3 & 4
VICT. c. 86.

STAT. 3 & 4
VICT. c. 86.

that a collection be always made. But wherever the pervading tone and feeling is not yet of this high order, be patient, strive, but strive gently, and with prayer to God, to raise your people to a better mind; and till they have attained to it, shock not their prejudices, irritate not their selfishness, it may be their worldly-mindedness. Only let them not deceive themselves; let them see and feel that you 'seek not theirs, but them.' Tell them the truth in love, and leave the rest to God.

"One further caution I would add, though I hope it is almost needless.

"While I urge you to return to a full observance of the rubric—falling short of your prescribed part in nothing—beware of exceeding it. The peculiar dangers of the times, as well as the prevailing tone of public opinion, call upon you most powerfully, as you would avoid being in the number of 'them through whom offences come,' to forbear all unnecessary innovation, especially, as I have recently had occasion to urge, that worst kind of innovation, the revival of obsolete usages not required by law, which are associated in the minds of the people with the superstitions and corruptions of Rome.

"This letter will reach you through your deans rural; and I advise you to communicate together in your several deaneries; thus of yourselves you will on most points come to an accordance. Should doubts arise, the preface to the Book of Common Prayer, 'concerning the service of the church,' tells you how to act. You are to have recourse to your bishop, who, if he be in doubt himself, is 'to send to the archbishop for the resolution thereof.'

"I also advise that you make no deviation from the mode in which you may be now severally in the habit of performing divine service, until there shall have been an opportunity of collating the different practices and propositions of the different deaneries.

"We may too, perhaps, be thus enabled to profit by the construction put on the rubrics in other dioceses, if any similar consideration of the matter meanwhile be had elsewhere.

"One great advantage must arise from this delay, that it will enable us to make all the change which shall be found necessary, at once, and thus to avoid future change.

"A very few months at the utmost will more than suffice to enable you to bring all questions to a decision. Should it be necessary for me to explain the grounds of the resolution of any of the doubts submitted to me, an opportunity will soon be afforded, if it please God that I have health and strength to hold my visitation in the next year, which it is my present intention to commence immediately after my ordination on Trinity Sunday.

"There is one 'diversity,' 'for the quieting and appeasing of which' I will now 'take order.' This I feel myself called upon to do, because, unhappily, the 'diversity' to which I refer is regarded by many of the people as exhibiting the badges of party, on one side, at least, if not on both. It cannot, therefore, too soon be settled.

"I refer to the use of the surplice in preaching, a matter so inconsiderable, that it could not, of itself, excite any strong feeling in any reasonable man. But the more unimportant it is in itself, the more manifest is the necessity of stripping it of that factitious importance which is given to it by its being made the symbol of dissension. This can be done only by requiring that there be no longer any 'diversity,' that all either use or disuse the surplice when they preach.

"If there were no law, one way or the other, there might be difficulty in deciding which to require. But the law, on due investigation, is clear, however complicated may be the inquiry which is necessary to ascertain it.

"That law, beyond all question which now arise, requires that the surplice be always used in the sermon, which is part of the communion service; and as to all other times, whenever a sermon is part of the ministration of the parochial clergy, there is so little reason for question, that I resolve the doubt, by requiring (as it was required in the diocese in which my own ministerial life was passed, the diocese of Durham, and there by the order of one of its most distinguished prelates, and of our most eminent ritualists Bishop Cosin,) that the surplice be always used.

"There remains one matter on which there is no rubrical direction, as it was not contemplated when the Book of Common Prayer was compiled: I mean the sermon at the time of evening prayer. The power of the bishop to order it rests on a modern statute, which does not control his discretion in ordering how it is to be introduced. I therefore direct (and I do so with the express sanction of his grace the archbishop, that, where there is a sermon in the evening, it be delivered after evening prayer, in the accustomed manner; that is, preceded by a collect (unless the bidding prayer be used, and the Lord's Prayer, and followed by the blessing. I hope it is unnecessary for me to add, that there must be no prayer of your own composing either before or after the sermon.

"I conclude with entreating you to join with me in fervent prayer to Him 'who is the author of peace and lover of concord,' that He will accept and bless this our humble endeavour to promote peace and concord among us within his own house, and in his own immediate service.

"I am, rev. and dear brethren,

"Your affectionate friend and brother.

"H. EXETER."

The Charge of the Bishop of Worcester delivered to the Candidates for Ordination at their final Examination, December 21. 1844.

"My dear young Friends,—It has been usual for the bishop, on occasions like the present, to address such pastoral advice to the candidates for orders as he may think best calculated to prepare their minds for the solemn engagements which they are about so soon to undertake; and, in performing this important function of his episcopal office, to dwell upon the general duties of the clergy, the doctrines which they are bound to teach, and the habits of life which they should endeavour to form. These are important matters, and in common times such as cannot be too frequently pressed upon your attention; but, in times like the present, it appears to me that it is incumbent upon the bishop to be somewhat more particular in his directions to those who are about to embark on troubled waters, and who will need all the assistance which an experienced pilot can afford them.

"I have on former occasions, not only in my primary charge addressed to the whole diocese, but afterwards, when opportunities like the present have occurred, of giving advice to my younger brethren in the ministry, deprecated that spirit of innovation which, on the plea of a more punctual observance of the rubric and a respect for the practices of the primitive church, was, I felt convinced, calculated to alienate the affections of the laity from the clergy, and thus to give a fatal blow to our beloved church, which must depend very much, not only for its usefulness but its security, on retaining its hold upon the affections of the people. However necessary it may be to recommend caution and discretion in these matters to the clergy at large, it is more especially so to those who are just entering on the discharge of their sacred calling. It too often happens, that those who have taken a wrong direction, however much they may afterwards be sensible of the evil consequences resulting from their indiscretion, are deterred by a false shame, and perhaps by a not unnatural indisposition to give way before the prejudices of their people, from retracing their steps, and restoring the intercourse between themselves and their parishioners to that happy state of peace and tranquillity which may be considered as the general character of our church before a mistaken regard for obsolete forms introduced discord and dissension among us. Those of you who are on the morrow to receive the first orders in the church cannot have thus committed yourselves; and it may be reasonably hoped, that they who have for a short time been ministering as deacons, have been too sensible of their subordinate rank in the church to have ventured to take a decided line on these controverted points, till a longer experience had enabled them to weigh certain evils against most problematical advantages. My advice to you then is, that in entering upon your several cures, you retain the privileges you at present possess, of not being committed to a party, and be cautious how you take a course which I am confident you will be anxious to retrace, when you have found that you have lost thereby the affections of your people; but in which a false pride, and the feelings naturally belonging to party, may induce you, notwithstanding, to persevere.

"In reviewing the history of our church since the Reformation, it is hardly possible to note a time when its prosperity and usefulness was more remarkable than the period immediately preceding the publication of the Oxford Tracts. An increased degree of zeal, a more entire devotion to their sacred functions, was manifest among the clergy; and not only did the most complete concord exist between them and the laity, but the latter attested their deep veneration for the church of their forefathers, by contributing most liberally to the erection of churches and the support of church and missionary societies. The service of the church was then performed in strict accordance with the general directions of the rubric; and though, on some trifling points, slight variations had been introduced, it was generally understood, that although these variations could not be legally sanctioned without the authority of convocation, they were made in deference to public opinion, and under the authority derived from the tacit acquiescence of the bishops. Schools were multiplied, the great truths of the everlasting gospel were more distinctly and more generally preached, and such was the impression gradually made on those who had separated from us, by such increased zeal and activity on the part of our clergy, that in several dioceses not only dissenting ministers, but whole congregations of dissenters, joined our communion. My brethren, I will not contrast this state of things with that which prevails at the present moment in other dioceses, and, I fear, in a small portion even of this diocese: but, as nothing human is perfect, and as in all the transactions of life, it must be our lot to decide upon a comparative balance of advantages and disadvantages, I will request you to make the comparison, and then ask yourselves whether the advantages, whatever they may be, which can be derived from a minute regard to ritual observances and the usages of antiquity, may not be purchased at too dear a rate, if purchased at such a price.

"The limits within which I must necessarily confine myself on an occasion like the present will not admit of my going into the various points which have of late been made the matter of so much unpleasant discussion; but it may be useful to you that I should dwell upon one or two with regard to which you may entertain doubts, and on which you will be compelled to make up your minds when you take possession of your respective curacies. And, first, with regard to the habit which you ought to wear when instructing your people from the pulpit. This is a question which I consider so utterly unimportant that I have never hitherto thought it worth while to express my opinion on the subject. I have myself been present during the celebration of divine service when the officiating clergyman has thought fit to preach in a surplice, without thinking it necessary to notice such a deviation from the general custom; and though I certainly should have been better pleased if no such innovation had been attempted, still I considered the whole matter as much too insignificant to require my interference. What, however, is in itself insignificant, acquires importance when it is considered as the badge of a party, and when, on this account, it becomes a stumbling-block and offence to others. On this ground I should be disposed to advise you to continue the practice which has so long prevailed of preaching in your academical habit, even though by so doing you deviated from the precise directions of the rubric. For the sake of those, however, whose consciences are tender on this point, I have carefully considered the question, and I have satisfied myself, and I hope that I may satisfy you, that it never has been the custom since the Reformation for the clergy to preach in their surplices. The whole argument upon this point turns upon the sermon being a portion of the communion service. If, therefore, we can show that the sermon is not a part of that service, there will remain no longer the slightest ground for an innovation which, though in itself indifferent, will be sure to shock the prejudices and excite the suspicion of your congregations. The 58th Canon, which relates to this matter, is thus headed, 'Ministers reading divine service and administering the sacraments to wear surplices;' and it directs that every minister saying the public prayers or ministering the sacraments or other rites of the church, shall wear a decent and comely surplice with sleeves, to be provided at the charge of the parish. Now, can it be said that when we are preaching a sermon we are either saying public prayers or administering a sacrament? That we are not doing the former is self-evident, and I will proceed to show that the sermon, though introduced in the course of the communion service, forms no part of the proper sacramental service of the Lord's supper. It is worthy of remark that in the First Prayer-Book of Edward the Sixth so little were the ten commandments or the sermon considered a part of the sacramental service that, after this portion of the service had been concluded, the following rubric occurred: 'That so many as shall be partakers of the holy communion shall tarry still in the quire, or in some convenient place nigh the quire, the men on the one side and the women on the other side. All other (that mind not to receive the holy communion) shall depart out of the quire, except the minister and clerks.' It is clear, therefore, that at that time, so far from the sermon forming part of the sacramental service, a complete interruption occurred after the sermon, during which those who did not mind to receive the holy communion are directed to retire, and then the proper sacramental service commences. This rubric is indeed not repeated in the Second Prayer-Book of Edward the Sixth or in the Prayer-Book which we now use; but it is clear that the like interruption of the service was contemplated, for immediately after the Nicene creed the curate is directed to declare unto the people what holidays or fasting days are to be observed in the week following; and all briefs, citations, and excommunications, are directed to be read; and can this be said to form part of the sacramental service? 'Then,' the rubric proceeds, 'shall follow the sermon;' so that you perceive that preaching a sermon is classed with reading briefs, citations, and excommunications, which, certainly, in the words of the 58th Canon, can form no part either of divine service, or of administering the sacrament, during which ministers are directed to wear a surplice.

"The inference which I have attempted to draw from the rubric is further confirmed by the practice adopted at our two universities. It is well known that in no place is a regard for strict ritual observance more observed than in our universities; and yet so little is the sermon considered a part of the sacramental service, that it is preached at a different place and at a different time from the college chapels, where daily service is read and the sacraments are administered; and here I cannot but observe, that if the surplice had ever been worn, as the proper habit of a preacher, it would have been adopted in our university pulpits; but here we know, that at the present time the gown is always worn and I believe I may venture to say, that no record exists of the surplice having ever been used on such occasions, and the gown substituted for it; but such a change could not have been effected in a place where old customs are so strictly adhered to, as in our universities without authority, and if effected by authority, some record of it would unquestionably exist at the present day. Again so far was the sermon from being considered as included in the reading of public prayers or ministering the sacraments, that we know it was frequently preached by some of our most eminent reformers at St. Paul's Cross, and it can hardly be supposed, that the surplice was worn on such occasions. The substance of the case I take to be, that you are directed to use the surplice only when reading divine service or administering the sacraments; you then appear in your proper character of priest or deacon, appointing a minister in holy things; but when you preach, you assume the character of a teacher, and as such your proper habit (if, indeed, proper or improper are fit words for a matter so insignificant) is your academical gown with a hood, denoting your degree at the university.

"I have thus attempted to prove that it is a mistaken notion to suppose that the surplice is the proper dress for you to wear in the pulpit. If I have not convinced you, I think that you must all admit, that, under the circumstances which I have stated to you, it is at least a doubtful question, and a very doubtful question I feel sure that you will obey the apostle's direction, which cannot have much more authority with you than anything which I can say, and 'follow after the things which make for peace.'

"Another change which has, of late years, been attempted in our church service, is the reading of the prayer for the church militant, which, if originally intended to form part of the service, had been almost universally discontinued in our parochial churches, and even in many of our cathedrals. Up to this point the rubrics are certainly inconsistent. In that which immediately precedes the prayer, the following words occur: 'And when there is a communion, the priest shall place upon the table so much bread and wine as he shall think sufficient.'

after which done, the priest shall say, Let us pray for the whole state of Christ's church militant here on earth.' Did the rubric stand alone, there could be no doubt that the prayer for the church militant was to be read only when the sacrament was about to be administered; but another rubric occurs, inconsistent with the above, at the conclusion of the communion service, where we read, 'That upon Sundays and holydays, if there be no communion, shall be said all that is appointed at the communion until the end of the general prayer for the whole state of Christ's church militant here on earth.' It is difficult to account for these two contradictory rubrics, which appear to have been inserted at the same time, that is, at the second revision of the Prayer Book in the reign of Edward the Sixth; but as they do exist, it is not extraordinary that the clergy should have felt themselves at liberty to observe which they pleased; and partly on account of the length of the service, so distressing to those who are in advanced years, partly on account of the awkwardness of being obliged again to exchange the gown for the surplice, this prayer became gradually discontinued. And here I cannot but observe, that the disuse of this prayer is of itself a proof that the surplice was not usually worn in the pulpit. Had it been so, there would have been no difficulty in the minister's returning from the pulpit to the communion table, and reading the prayer as directed by the second rubric to which I referred. It was because he wore a gown, and not a surplice, that this practice was found inconvenient, and therefore was discontinued.

"The only other point to which I shall think it necessary to call your especial attention on the present occasion, is the use of the offertory, and the collecting of alms from the congregation on every Lord's day. There is no doubt that originally this collection was intended as a substitute for the alms which used to be given at the doors of convents, and as it is still continued in Scotland and the isle of Man, where no poor rates exist, we may reasonably conclude that it would never have been discontinued in this country, if the poor had not been otherwise provided for by a rate levied on all the pariahioners. The custom then became almost universal, that it should only be used at the administration of the Lord's supper. Attempts, however, have of late years been made by some of the clergy, to renew the practice of reading the offertory and making collections every Sunday, for the purpose of procuring contributions towards the support of our church societies; and where this can be done without offence to the congregation, it is impossible to object to a practice which, while it encourages the charitable feelings of the congregation, might, if extensively adopted, materially aid those most valuable institutions. The consent, however, of the congregation, is a material element in the propriety of adopting such a practice, for we have no right to force upon a congregation, without their consent, what is not strictly legal; and I have always been intimately convinced, that no collections can be legally made in a church during the reading of the offertory, except for the benefit of the poor residing in the parish where the church is situated, or under the authority of the queen's letter. The phrase of the 'poor man's box,' which occurs in the rubric, can have reference only to that box which used to be placed in all our churches to receive the alms of the charitable for the benefit of that particular parish. A very curious decision of Sir Littellton Powys, in the reign of George the First, has been lately published, which sets this matter at rest, for it is therein distinctly stated as the law at that time, (and it does not appear that any adverse decision has been since made to reverse it,) that no collections can be legally made in churches during the offertory, except for the poor of the parish, but by the leave and permission of the crown. If, therefore, you think fit to restore the use of the offertory in any of the churches where you may be appointed to serve, you will bear in mind, that all the money so collected can only be legally applied to the relief of the poor of the parish. There can be no objection to collections being made for other purposes, in cases where the congregation themselves are consenting parties to them; but, whenever such collections are resisted, it will not be safe for you to persist, while the law upon this subject remains, at best, so doubtful.

"I have thus stated my opinion upon some of those points which have been the most fruitful causes of dissension between the clergy and the laity, and in conclusion, I will only refer you to one of the questions which you will be called upon to answer to-morrow. You will be asked, 'Will you maintain and set forward as much as lieth in you quietness, peace, and love among all Christian people, and especially among them that are or shall be committed to your charge?' To this question you will be required to reply, 'I will do so, the Lord being my helper.' Be assured that your usefulness in your parishes will very much depend upon your fulfilling the pledge which you will thus give; and if you will go forth to your respective cures anxious to fulfil your sacred duties in the spirit of peace, not pertinacious about trifles, even if the law be on your side, and still less so if this be doubtful, anxious only to win souls to Christ; and with this view, endeavouring to conciliate the affections of your people while you point out to them the way of everlasting life, 'the Lord will be your helper.' He will bless your ministerial labours with success; and may you hereafter be enabled to appear before his judgment seat, and say with well-grounded confidence, 'Of those whom Thou hast given me have I lost none.'"

Letter from the Bishop of Exeter to the Editor, commenting on the Charge of the Bishop of Worcester.

"London, 26 February, 1845.

"Sir,—In complying with your request, that I would allow you to publish in your collection of the Ecclesiastical Statutes, my letter to my clergy, of November 19, 1844, 'On the Observance of the Rubric,' I avail myself of the opportunity to make some remarks on certain particulars contained in a charge delivered by the Bishop of Worcester to his candidates for ordination, on 22nd December, of last year, at the very time when the excitement on account of that letter was at its height. His lordship has, indeed, been so good as voluntarily to inform me, that he did not make the remarks on the rubric, contained in his charge, in intentional opposition to those which I had expressed. But as he did therein expressly refer to 'the state of things then prevailing in other dioceses,'—as his remarks did, in fact, impugn mine, and as the publication of them, at that time, did, in fact, greatly stimulate the resistance which was made to me,—I think it right to state the reasons, why I adhere to the opinions which I have given to my clergy on the principal matters, on which his lordship has pronounced a contrary judgment.

"I. The first point is, whether the sermon be 'part of the communion service,' or be, as the Bishop of Worcester considers it, 'classed with reading briefs, citations, excommunications,' &c. This is the sole ground, on which his lordship rests his judgment, that the surplice is not to be worn in preaching.

"When I stated that the sermon is 'part of the communion service,' it is plain that I did not consider it as belonging to the strictly 'sacramental service,' any more than the decalogue, the epistle and gospel, the Nicene creed, the prayer for the church militant, &c., which are to be read whether there be a communion or not.

"Now for the statement actually made by me, I have the authority, I believe, of all the ritualists, who have ever dealt with the matter. Let one or two testimonies suffice. 1st, I cite from Nicholls on the Common Prayer; 'Additional Notes on the Communion Service,' 40.

"'Rubrick. After the creed shall follow the sermon. This is one difference from the Mass-Book, where there is no sermon there appointed; for they commonly have their sermons in the afternoon. But the church of England hath restored the sermon into the due place of it, after the reading of the epistle and gospel, which, in the ancient church, was the subject of the sermon which followed.' 'From the constitutions of the apostles, the custom has been very general, to begin the sermon when the reading of the epistle and gospel was done. The creed was afterwards added and inserted, because of the heresies newly risen.' Ibid.

"In confirmation of the accuracy of this statement of the practice of the ancient church, I add a citation from the First Apology of Justin Martyr, written not later than A.D. 150. In the 87th section, he thus relates the ordinary celebration of the Eucharist. 'On the day which is called Sunday, there is an assembly in one place of all who dwell either in towns or in the country; and the memoirs of the apostles or the writings of the prophets are read, as long as the time permits. Then, when the reader hath ceased, the president delivers a discourse, in which he reminds and exhorts them to the imitation of these good things. We then all stand up together, and put forth prayer. Then, when we cease from prayer, bread is brought, and wine, and water: and the president in like manner offers up prayers and praises with his utmost power: and the people express their assent by saying, Amen. The consecrated elements are then distributed and received by every one.' Translation of Epistles, &c., Chevalier, 275.

"2. L'Estrange, Alliance of Divine Offices 170. Rubric. After the creed, if there be no sermon. 'In the primitive service, no creed interposing, the sermon immediately followed the gospel, and was an usual exhortation upon it, whence I conceive the name Postil is derived, quasi post illa evangelia, postil being nothing but a discourse upon, and subsequent to, the gospel.' It may be well to add, that most of the Homilies of the Fathers were on the gospels of the day.

"In our own church, since the Reformation, the sermon has always been considered as part of the communion service. In the rubric of 1549, it is said, 'After the creed ended, shall follow the sermon, or homily, wherein if the people be not exhorted to the worthy receiving of the holy sacrament, then shall the curate give this exhortation to those that be minded to receive the same.' Here, if the sermon is not part of the service, neither is the exhortation.

"Lastly, there is a decisive proof, that at the review of the Book of Common Prayer, in 1662, the sermon was distinctly considered as part of the communion service. For at the Savoy Conference, under its head, 'The Order for the Administration of the Lord's Supper,' Rubric, After the creed, if there be no sermon, shall follow one of the homilies, the non-conforming ministers make this exception: 'We desire that the preaching of the word may be strictly joined, and not left so indifferent, at the administration of the sacrament.' Cartwell, Conf. 318.

"So much for the sermon being part of the communion service, on which the Bishop of Worcester tells us, that 'the whole argument' for the use of the surplice, in preaching, 'turns.'

"II. The next particular on which his lordship remarks, is the reading of 'The Prayer for the Church Militant.' Upon this point, he says, 'the rubrics are certainly inconsistent.' What are these rubrics, which are thus inconsistent? 1. 'Where there is a communion, the priest shall place upon the table so much bread and wine as he shall think sufficient; after which doth the priest shall say, Let us pray for the whole state of Christ's church militant here on earth.' 2. 'Upon Sundays, and Holydays, if there be no communion, shall be said all that is appointed at the communion, until the end of the general prayer for the whole state of Christ's church militant here on earth.'

"I profess myself at a loss to perceive the slightest inconsistency in these two directions. If there be a communion, the priest is to place the bread and wine upon the table, before he says this prayer:—If there be no communion he is to proceed until the end of the prayer, without placing the bread and wine upon the table.

"The usage of the church has accorded with this construction of the rubrics. Not only in almost all cathedrals, but in many parish churches, on Sundays and holidays, it is still usual to 'say one or more of the sentences of the offertory, and the prayer for the church militant.'

"In all the services for the State holidays, this is invariably ordered.

"Nay, it is plainly recognised in the rubric of 'The Form of Solemnization of Matrimony,' as the constant and necessary usage. 'The banns of all that are to be married together, must be published in the church three several Sundays or Holy-days, in the time of divine service, immediately before the sentences for the offertory.' This, it is true, has been altered in modern Prayer-Books, since the Marriage Act of 26 Geo. 2, c. 33 (without sufficient authority): but the testimony of this rubric to the duty of reading the offertory and the prayer for the church militant remains in full force.

"III. The only other particular, to which the Bishop of Worcester directs his observations, is 'the use of the offertory and the collecting of alms on every Lord's day:' but this will occupy me at some length.

"Now, I agree with his lordship, and have so told my clergy, that it is not desirable that this should be done, 'without the consent of the congregation.' But I do not agree with him in discouraging the clergy from seeking to bring their congregation to consent to them in this (as I consider it) work of Christian love.

"But the bishop further expresses his 'intimate conviction, that no collections can be legally made in a church during the reading of the offertory, except for the poor of the parish, or under the authority of the queen's letter.' He adds, 'A very curious decision of Sir Littellton Powys, in the reign of George the First, has been lately published, which sets this matter at rest; for it is therein distinctly stated, as the law at that time, (and it does not appear that any adverse decision has been since made to reverse it,) that no collections can be legally made in churches during the offertory, except for the poor of the parish, but by the leave and permission of the crown. If, therefore, you think fit to restore the use of the offertory, you will bear in mind, that all the money so collected can only be legally applied to the relief of the poor of the parish. There can be no objection to collections being made for other purposes, in cases where the congregation themselves are consenting parties to them.'

"On this very remarkable passage, I commence my observations, by adverting to its concluding sentence; of which I must not refrain saying, that, while it completely accords with my recommendation to my clergy, it does directly contradict all that his lordship has just before said, especially the stated authority of the decision of Sir Littelton Powys. 'The money collected at the offertory,' says the Bishop of Worcester, 'can only be legally applied to the relief of the poor of the parish,' yet he immediately adds, 'There can be no objection to collections being made for other purposes in cases where the congregation consent.' In other words, that such an application is illegal, can be no objection to it!

"Now this, I say, is not only to contradict the bishop himself, but is also in the very teeth of Sir Littellton Powys's decision, of which he has just said that it 'sets this matter at rest.'

"That learned judge's decision did not at all proceed on the non-consent of the congregation. Be they consenting, or dissenting, (in the case before him, it appeared that the great body of them were not only consenting, but eager and forward to contribute,) he decided that the collection for any purpose, but the relief of the poor of the parish, without the king's letter, was illegal.

"In order to do justice to this decision, we must bear in mind several matters, which the Bishop of Worcester did not think it necessary to state.

"1. Sir L. Powys was not directly adjudicating upon the rubric respecting the offertory. The case was one of an indictment against certain parties, that 'being evilly and seditiously disposed towards the government of our most excellent lord, George, &c., and averse to the happy establishment thereof, and wickedly desirous of gain, and horridly and unjustly intending to procure to themselves unlawful gains, &c., did conspire and confederate, with the said boys and girls (charity-school children of another parish,) to wander up and down in Kent, &c. in order to collect great sums for the said purposes.'

"In the course of the trial, one of the witnesses for the defendants, in giving his evidence, referred to the rubrics, respecting the offertory, as authorising the collection in this case; which none of the numerous counsel, (three or four on each side,) had done. Upon this the judge, reporting the case in a letter to the Lord Keeper Parker, tells him, 'As to the rubric in the communion service, I said I thought that was to be taken secundum subjectam materiam, viz., the ordinary collection at the communion, which is ever then used to be made for the poor of the parish, but should not extend to every collection the parson should appoint for any foreign charity; and that I did not till now hear, that the clergy did claim that power. And further I said, I thought these words of the rubric did not imply such a power in the parson for the words being, &c., such a power of appointing a collection at pleasure is as much implied in the churchwardens as in the parson, &c.; but that I thought that the parson and churchwardens, either jointly or severally, could not appoint any collection for charity otherwise than in common form for the poor of their own parish, and that those are the charitable uses intended by the rubric, and particularly at the communion, to the service of which these words of the rubric are subjoined.'

STAT. 3 & 4
VICT. c. 86.

STAT. 3 & 4
VICT. c. 86.

"Having thus told the lord keeper what he had said, he adds, 'I hope your lordship, on reading that part of the rubric at the end of the communion service, will be of my opinion, which I then suddenly declared, as to the implication, and do not since alter, unless otherwise convinced.'

"2. That an 'opinion thus suddenly declared,' on a point incidentally arising, should be invested with the character of an authoritative decision, is itself somewhat unusual. It would be so, even if the judge had had the whole case before him. But this was not so. It is avowed by himself, that he looked either solely or particularly to the rubric at the end of the communion service, where he read, 'The money given at the offertory shall be disposed of to such pious and charitable uses as the minister and churchwardens shall think fit.' Of these, he says that they must be 'for the poor of their own parish.'

"Now, if he had adverted to the rubric after the sentences at the offertory, he would have seen, that 'whilst these sentences are in reading, the deacons, &c., shall receive the alms for the poor, and other devotions of the people.' And if he had adverted to this, is it improbable that he would have paused, before he had decided, that 'and other devotions of the people,' meant 'no other devotions of the people' but those which were just designated as 'alms for the poor'?"

"3. Again, if he had not been obliged to 'suddenly declare his opinion'—if he had had time to consider and reflect, is it improbable, that he would have inquired a little into matters, which might illustrate the meaning of these very important words, 'and other devotions of the people'? If he had done so, he would have found that these words were, for the first time, introduced into the rubric in 1662, seemingly for the very purpose of extending the objects for which collections were to be made at the offertory, beyond 'alms for the poor,' the only object mentioned, or implied, in the rubric of any preceding Book of Common Prayer.

"In the First Book of Edward the Sixth, the rubric says, 'In the meantime, whilst the clerks do sing the offertory, so many as are disposed shall offer to the poor men's box every one according to his ability and charitable mind.' In the Second Book of the same king, in that of Queen Elizabeth, of King James the First, it is to similar effect: 'Then shall the churchwardens, &c., gather the devotion of the people, and put the same into the poor men's box.' But in 1662, in the rubric which is now established by law, the words are enlarged, as is stated above: 'Alms for the poor, and other devotions of the people.' Could any judge, with this fact before him, have ruled that the words, so added, were designed to have no meaning at all?"

"4. But, it may be contended that, as it is not stated what are the 'other devotions of the people,' these words have no specific meaning, and therefore may be either rejected by reason of their uncertainty, or at any rate ought to be limited to parochial purposes.

"Now, here a doubt would be started, 'concerning the manner how to understand, do, and execute the things contained in the Book of Common Prayer.' In such a case, the law has plainly prescribed the course which must be taken; the preface to the Book of Common Prayer, 'Concerning the Service of the Church,' which is part of the Act of Uniformity, has ordered that 'The parties that so doubt, or diversely take anything, shall always resort to the bishop of the diocese, who by his discretion shall take order for the quieting and apposing of the same; so that the same order be not contrary to anything contained in this book.'

"I presume, therefore, to think, that Sir Littellton Powys, if he had been aware of the rule, thus sanctioned by the statute, would have hesitated long, before he could have thought himself at liberty to put any construction whatever on any doubtful words in the rubric. He would have seen that he had no jurisdiction: that it was the bishop who had a right to resolve the doubt; and that this right could not be controlled by any court, unless it were so exercised, as should be 'contrary to something contained in the Book.' In the present instance, the Bishop of Worcester adopts, as he has a right to do, the dictum of Sir Littellton Powys, and resolves the doubt, in his own diocese, by saying that 'alms for the poor and other devotions of the people' mean no more than 'alms for the poor' of the parish; the Bishop of Exeter, as he has a right to do, resolves the doubt in his diocese, by saying, that the words have not so restricted a meaning, as to extend to 'other devotions of the people' for pious and charitable uses, not necessarily confined to the poor of the parish.

"I have dwelt thus at length on the above decision of Sir L. Powys, because great importance has been ascribed to it, not only by the Bishop of Worcester, but by other persons, especially by one or two of the ex-nicharies of my own cathedral.

"I must now add, concerning it, that I can hardly conceive any decision of any court less commended to our respect by the circumstances under which it was given—at a time of extraordinary political excitement—in a case in which the very intricacies involved party interests, and stimulated party feelings—by a judge who, even on the basis of justice, gave vent to those feelings, in a manner scarcely paralleled by a Scroggs or Jeffries.

"Though not a particle of evidence was given to sustain the charge of a political conspiracy, and disaffection to the government, yet this judge thought fit to tell the jury, that 'he was a little suspicious that V. H. (the preacher) had Cardinal Albani's leave, as well as the Bishop of Rochester (Atterbury) to make this collection, in view of some designs; and was confirmed in this suspicion, because the manner of raising the money had some resemblance to that of the Cardinal's in Spain;' Cardinal Albani at that time, A.D. 1719, being notoriously employed in exerting all the power and influence in Spain, (where he was prime minister) to place the Pretender on the throne of England."

"This same judge, in the same letter in which he reports his conduct on this trial to the lord keeper, *boasts of some other of his achievements on the same circuit: viz., 'A man at Rochester, worth nothing, was convicted before me of drinking the Pretender's health. I ordered him to be whipped in open market twice, till his back was bloody, with a month between the first and second whipping. At Lewes, a man was convicted before me of drinking the health of King James the Third, saying he knew no such man as King George. He had nothing but an annuity of 30*l.* per annum. I fined him 100*l.*, and committed him till it was paid, and that he should find good sureties for three years. I told him, that by paying 100*l.* to King George, he would certainly know there is such a person.'*

"This is the judge, whose decision must, it seems, be taken as having 'set at rest' the matter respecting the offertory.

"Be it so: but if his decision is to be taken at all, let it be taken, not only so far as may be convenient to those who adduce it, but also as far as it really goes. And this is, in Sir Littleton's own words, as follows:

"Here in England, no collection even for charity, (unless for the poor of the same parish,) is, by law, to be made, but by the leave and permission of the king, gathering of money being so nice a matter, that it must not be done, even for charity, without his leave, in the most compassionate cases.' This was the great principle of law, laid down by Sir Littleton Powys—this was his decision on the point actually before him; for the construction of the rubric was dealt with incidentally, and only as it might present an exception to his general principle. Of this principle, is it too much to say, that it has received its contradiction in the practice, the deliberate practice, of every judge who has ever sat on any bench of justice in England since the putting forth of this redoubted decision?

"But it has been contradicted not only by practice, but by the most deliberate judgments. Be it sufficient to cite the one instance, which is exhibited by the reporter of this very trial. At the trial of the rebel lords in 1746, it appeared it had been urged by several gentlemen in different counties, that the voluntary contributions, (not by authority of parliament, or the king's licence,) for loyal purposes, were illegal. Lord Hardwicke, (18 How. St. Tr. 501,) in his speech as lord high steward, said, 'Men of property of all ranks and orders, crowded in with liberal subscriptions, of their own motion, beyond the examples of former times, and uncompelled by any law; and yet in the most legal and warrantable manner, notwithstanding what has been ignorantly and presumptuously suggested to the contrary.'

"Happily, therefore, Sir Littleton Powys's decision has not 'set the matter at rest.' There may be collections for county hospitals, for church missionary, pastoral aid, conversion of the Jews, and other societies—after sermons—without the queen's letter,—which there could not be if that learned judge's decision had settled the matter in the way which has been asserted.

"I am, sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"A. J. Stephens, Esq."

H. EXETER."

Extract from a Charge of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol to the Clergy of the Diocese of Gloucester and Bristol.

The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol propounded the following opinions respecting the observance of church ordinances, in a charge to the clergy of his diocese, in August and September, 1844.

"It is impossible to regard without uneasiness the dissensions and agitations existing in the bosom of our establishment. Being desirous of avoiding topics of an irritating nature, I should probably have abstained from all allusion to our internal differences, were there not a danger that from my silence on this subject wrong inferences might be deduced. Having three years ago felt it my duty to declare in plain and uncompromising terms my condemnation of certain publications recently put forth by the reputed leaders of a section of the church, I now think it right to avow, that my sentiments upon those topics have undergone no change, and that all which has since passed has rather confirmed my opinions of the tendency of those writings to Romanism. It is painful to my feelings now, as on the former occasion, to have to utter remarks calculated to give pain to some of my clergy, for whose worth and character I entertain the sincerest esteem. But upon subjects of general concernment, whatever be my real sentiments, such and such only must I declare. It would be of little avail that you should come together for the purpose of meeting your diocesan, and listening to his counsel, unless that counsel were the offspring of his own unbiased judgment and mature conviction. Of the party of which public opinion considers the writers in question to be the leaders, I am far from joining in the indiscriminate censures which we frequently hear; and am ready to allow, that in some respects the church owes to them an obligation. It were to be wished that each particular of their opinions and their practice were candidly and dispassionately considered on the ground of its own merits; for it is my conviction, that the general adoption of such parts of the system as are consistent with the spirit and intentions of our Reformers, would do more to obviate any danger apprehended from this party, than all the denunciations of their supposed views and designs. . . . Not satisfied with a scrupulous attention to all the minutest injunctions of our rubric, they attempted to introduce forms of which the Anglican church knew nothing, and which, even if they had a certain antiquity to plead in their favour, had been intentionally discarded at the Reformation. Besides, attention seemed to be fixed more upon outward ceremonies than upon the spiritual character of our worship; and the church was exalted from being the minister of God's word and sacraments, till it appeared to be all but an object of adoration. When to this was added a constant and studious propensity to commend the practices of the papal church, and to lament over our separation, it cannot be wondered, that a feeling of revulsion was excited against the system in many who were tenacious of our apostolical principles, and repudiated doctrines founded upon anything except the written Word of God. Minds imbued with Scripture recoiled from the idea of any mediation except that of our Redeemer, or of grounding our hopes upon any merits except those of his sacrifice on the Cross for the sins of mankind. On the other hand, the jealousy of which we speak tends to excite suspicions upon the most unsubstantial foundation, and thus to keep up a state of agitation and excitement highly prejudicial to that 'godly quietness' in which we pray that our church may be permitted to serve the Lord. For instance, where a congregation has been long accustomed to the omission of the prayer for the church militant after the sermon, and where baptisms have usually taken place either before or after the service, instead of the time prescribed, and when on a sudden a clergyman corrects these irregularities, and likewise gives notice from the communion table of the holy days to be observed in the ensuing week, strange alarm seizes a part of the parishioners; they regard as innovations what are simply the duties enjoined to their pastor; and after much agitation and disturbance, they discontinue their attendance in the house of the Lord. That any such exhibition of ignorance has occurred in this diocese, I have not heard; but elsewhere it certainly has: and I mention it as one instance of the evil consequences of a disregard of regulations on one hand, and on the other, as a caution against abrupt and ill-understood reform. Let it be considered, that for the misapprehensions of the laity we may perhaps be ourselves to blame. We know that they are hardly ever acquainted with the canons or the acts of uniformity; and many editions of the Prayer Book have been published, in which the rubric is totally omitted, apparently with the view of diminishing the bulk and price of the volume. I have myself observed some of these impressions, which were not the speculation of a bookseller, but proceeded from the press of one of our universities in the latter part of the last and commencement of the present century.

"In regard to ceremonies, I cannot do better than entreat that all will consider with attention the remarks of the preface to the Prayer Book, which seem to me so fraught with good sense, with Christian spirit, and with that moderation which is taught by the perusal of the apostolical epistles, that they can hardly fail to procure the assent of all candid minds, to whatever party they may happen to incline."

X. A DECENT COMMUNION TABLE.

Judgment of Sir Herbert Jenner Fust in Faulkner v. Litchfield & Stearne.

This was an appeal to the court of Arches [Jan. 31, 1845] from the Consistorial court of Ely, which had granted a faculty, on the application of the churchwardens of the parish of the Holy Sepulchre, in the town of Cambridge, for confirming certain alterations, repairs, and restorations made in the parish church, under a former faculty, and extending it to other alterations and repairs not comprised in such former faculty, including a stone communion table and a stone credence table. The minister of the parish, (the Rev. R. R. Faulkner,) was a party to the petition for the former faculty, but not to the application for the second faculty, which he opposed in the court below, and he was now the appellant. The facts were shortly these: the church of the Holy Sepulchre, (commonly known as the "Round Church,") had been thoroughly repaired and restored, according to the resolutions of the parishioners in vestry, under the directions of a committee, of which the incumbent was a member, with the assistance of the Cambridge Camden Society. The appellant alleged in his act of petition, that the repairs had been almost completed, and the church nearly ready to be re-opened for divine service, when he learnt, for the first time, that a table, in good and substantial repair, which had stood in the chancel, well suited and commonly used for the celebration of the Lord's Supper, and of a kind generally used for that purpose in all churches belonging to the established church in the country, had been removed, without his sanction, and "a stone altar, or altar table, and credence table, such as are erected and used for idolatrous and heretical purposes in popish churches," had been set up instead, the said altar being moreover cemented to the wall of the chancel, and being, from its form and great weight, incapable of being moved to any other part of the chancel or church; the said erection and fixing of the same being contrary as well to the laws, canons, and constitutions of the reformed protestant church by law established in this country, as to the rubrical directions in the Book of Common Prayer, and repugnant, moreover, to the pure and apostolical doctrines maintained and taught by the said church. The churchwardens, (respondents,) in reply, admitting that there was, prior to the faculty, a communion table of wood standing in the chancel, alleged that it became necessary, in accordance with the design of restoring the church to its original architectural character, and to preserve the uniformity of its internal arrangements, that a new communion table should be provided, and a private contributor to the funds for the restoration of the church having presented, as a free gift to the parish, a new stone communion table, corresponding in design with the interior arrangements of the church, and also a table, usually termed a credence table, for the reception of the bread and wine about to be used in the celebration of the holy communion, prior to the consecration of the same, they were, in accordance with the ancient design of the fabric, placed in the chancel; that the same table is not cemented or otherwise fixed to the wall of the chancel, nor incapable of being removed if required; that the tables were placed with the unanimous concurrence of the parishioners in vestry; that the commonion table is a decent and convenient table, well fit for the due celebration of the holy communion, and that the other table is assistant to the ministration of the same, and neither is repugnant to the laws or lawful usages of the church of England. The respondents annexed to their act a list of churches in which there are communion tables of a nearly similar kind. On the part of the respondents, affidavits of three persons, employed in executing the repairs of the church, were produced, which stated that the top slab and the three upright slabs of the altar were jointed against the finished plaster of the upright chancel wall with mortar; that it weighs upwards of two tons, and that the bottom or lower slab, forming the base, was made to rest on concrete, and was firmly embedded in mortar, about one inch below the chancel floor.

Sir Herbert Jenner Prest., in a very long judgment, after detailing the allegations and proofs, observed: "In my mind, the motives of the parties have nothing to do with the question, which is one simply of the construction of the rubrics, incorporated in the Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2, called the Act of Uniformity, and of the Canons of 1603, particularly the 82nd Canon; namely, 'Is this, or is it not, a communion table within the meaning of the rubrics and canons, and the general laws, canons, and constitutions ecclesiastical of the realm?' It would be useless for the court, if it held that this is not a communion table, to grant a faculty, which could not sanction an article illegal in itself. If it should appear that the true construction of the word 'table,' in the rubrics and canons, is, that it should be of wood, and moveable, not fixed and immoveable, the court must proceed in the same manner as if it were so expressly declared and enacted.

"If the fact were material, I should be bound to say, upon the affidavits, that the allegation of the churchwardens, that the table did not adhere to the wall of the chancel, is a mere allegation, and that, at the date of the affidavits, (the 12th June, 1844,) the table did adhere to the wall by mortar or cement. But, in my view of the case, this makes no difference; if the structure is fixed, as it is stated to be, to the floor of the chancel, firmly embedded in mortar or concrete, it is just as immoveable as if made to adhere to the wall.

"The court has been told, in the act on petition, that it became essential, in order to preserve the uniformity of the internal arrangements of the church, and with reference to its original architectural character, that a new communion table should be erected corresponding to such arrangements; but the court must never hold, that uniformity of internal style is to be consulted in preference to that which is the object of the statute, namely, uniformity in the performance of divine service; it cannot sacrifice the greater uniformity to the minor one of internal style and arrangement. And the court might even doubt whether, in point of taste, a great sacrifice would have been made, when it appears that there are three other churches of the same character in which no such table is erected. It does not appear that, in the Temple Church, which has been recently repaired and restored, this kind of communion table has been thought essential.

"Now it is admitted that the present question must be decided by the Act of Uniformity, and the rubrics incorporated therein. All the former Acts of Uniformity were not incorporated into or confirmed by that of Car. 2. But in order to arrive at the true meaning of the expression in the present Act of Uniformity and rubric, it may not be improper to consider the sense and meaning attached to the term 'table' when the alterations were made in respect to the fittings up of churches at the Reformation, and down to the year 1662, when the first edition of the present Book of Common Prayer was published. And in construing acts of parliament, it is the rule, in the first instance, to construe the terms in their usual, general, and popular sense, and only to resort to any other construction where it was clearly the intention of the framers that a more restricted or a wider interpretation should be given to the terms than they would naturally suggest: and in considering which mode of interpretation should be applied, it is proper to see what was the contemporaneous construction, because contemporanea expositio est fortissima in lege. What then was the general use of the word when the first change was made from 'altar' to 'table,' at the Reformation? for there must have been some difference between these terms in the minds of the persons by whom the change was made.

"Prior to the Reformation, the religion of this country being the Roman catholic, the church of England held the doctrine of transubstantiation; that doctrine, at the Reformation, was one of the most important points upon which the two churches differed from each other, and by the 28th Article of our church, it is declared to be 'repugnant to the plain words of scripture, overthroweth the nature of a sacrament, and hath given occasion to many superstitions.' It is necessary, therefore, to see what a 'table' was at that time, and what an 'altar,' and whether the terms were indifferently used: whether it was not meant that there should be a change in the form as well as the name.

"It is important to this inquiry to see, in the first place, what were the requisites of altars at the time when these structures were used in our churches before the Reformation. Cardinal Bona. (De Rebus Liturgicis, lib. 1, c. 20,) gives the origin, history, and condition of altars from the earliest times. They were at first of wood; subsequently, of stone or wood; but at length it was required that no altar should be used that was not of stone: 'Sancivit Ecclesia ut nemini liceat celebrari nisi in altari lapideo consecrato.' The construction varied; sometimes they were supported by one pillar, and sometimes by two, the most recent being in the form of tombs, 'humuli formam referebant, tanquam martyrum sepulchra,' and they were to be fixed and immoveable, adhering to the place in which they were erected. Cardinal Devoti, in his Institutiones Canonice, (vol. 2, tit. 7, lib. 2, sec. 12,) speaks much to the same effect. The court may, therefore, safely conclude that, at the time of the Reformation, the altars in our churches were of stone, fixed and immovable, and generally in the form of tombs of the martyrs.

"Upon the renunciation of the doctrine of transubstantiation by the reformed church, it became necessary to remove from the minds of the people all those superstitious notions connected with that doctrine. Up to the accession of Edward the Sixth, however, mass continued to be celebrated; and we find, in his First Prayer Book, (1549,) that, in the Order for the Celebration of the Mass, the word 'altar' was used; but in the Second Prayer Book, (1552,) very material alterations were made in that service. In the First Prayer Book, the communion service is described as 'The Supper of the Lord and the Holy Communion, commonly called the Mass;' in the Second, it was called 'The Order for the Administration of the Lord's Supper or Holy Communion,' and the word 'table' was substituted for 'altar.'"

[The learned judge pointed out with great minuteness the several variations between the two Prayer Books.]

"In the Second Prayer Book the following direction is given: 'And to take away the superstition which any person hath or might have of the bread and wine, it shall suffice that the bread shall be such as is usual to be eaten at the table with other meats.' This seems to throw a very important light upon the meaning of the word 'table' in the Second Prayer Book.

"But in the interval between the publication of the two Prayer Books, certain events had occurred, and various orders and injunctions had been issued directing changes in the place where the sacrament was to be administered. In 1547, orders were given for the taking away and utterly destroying all shrines and monuments of superstition. In 1550, Bishop Ridley issued his Injunctions to the clergy in the diocese of London, 'for that the form of a table may more move and turn the simple from the old superstitious opinions of the popish mass, and to the right use of the Lord's supper, we exhort the curates, &c., to erect and set up the Lord's board after the form of an honest table,' and 'to take down and abolish all other by-altars or tables.' And it appears, from Cardwell's Documentary Annals, (No. 24, p. 100,) that an order in council was issued to take down all altars, and to place tables in their stead; and Burnet's History of the Reformation, (vol. 2, part 2, p. 31,) states that letters were sent to every bishop to 'pluck down the altars,' the reason assigned being that of 'removing the people from the superstitious opinions of the popish mass, and because table was a more proper name than altar for that on which the sacrament was laid.' It is proper to keep this consideration in mind with reference to the alterations made at this time, when communion tables came to be used instead of altars.

"It is clear that, in the reign of Edward the Sixth, the communion table was no longer of stone and fixed, but of wood and moveable, and was required to be placed in the body of the church or in the chancel, where the minister could be most conveniently seen and heard. In the reign of Mary, the acts passed in the preceding reign regarding religion were repealed; but upon the succession of Queen Elizabeth, in 1558, the statutes of Philip and Mary were, in their turn, repealed, and the orders contained in the Second Prayer Book of Edward the Sixth became again the rule for the administration of the sacrament. The object of this alteration was stated to be, the removal of the old superstitious connected with the popish mass, and one mode of effecting it was to be by the abolition of all altars, and the substitution of tables. This change must mean something more than a mere alteration of name, for the mere change of the name would have left the old superstitious notion of a sacrifice still remaining; the alteration must have been a substantial, not a merely nominal one."

[The learned judge then referred to the order of Queen Elizabeth in 1559, "For Tables in the Church," which directed that "the holy table in every church be decently made, and set in the place where the altar stood, and so to stand, saving when the communion of the sacrament is to be distributed, at which time the same shall be so placed a good sort within the chancel, as whereby the minister may be more conveniently heard, &c.; and after the communion done, from time to time, the same holy table to be placed where it stood before." Also to the Interpretations and further Considerations of the Injunctions, drawn up by the archbishops and bishops, "That the table be removed out of the choir into the body of the church, before the chancel door, and where the choir seemeth to be too little, or at great feast or receivings, and at the end of the communion, to be set up again, according to the Injunctions." Also, to the Advertisements, 1564, "That the parish provide a decent table, standing on a frame, for the communion table." Also, to Archbishop Parker's Inquiries, 1569, "Have you a comely and decent table for the holy communion, covered decently, and set in the place prescribed by the queen's majesty's Injunctions?" Also, to Archbishop Grindall's Injunctions, 1571, that "all altars were to be pulled to the ground, and the altar-stones defaced, and bestowed to some common use; the prayers and other service appointed for the ministration of the holy communion to be done at the communion table;" and to his Articles of Inquiry, in 1576, when translated from York to Canterbury, "Whether in your churches and chapels all altars be utterly taken down and clean removed even unto the foundation, and the place where they stood paved, and the wall whereunto they joined painted over and made uniform with the rest?" Also, to the Report of the proceedings of the queen's commissioners at the cathedral church of St. Paul, at their visitation in 1559, (set forth very fully in Strype's Annals,) directing the removal of altars and the substitution of decent tables for the celebration of the Lord's supper. Also, to the demolition of the altar altars in Westminster Abbey, and generally throughout the diocese of London.]

"In the year 1571, (the reign of Elizabeth,) a set of canons and constitutions ecclesiastical was published, in one of which it is expressly stated of what material the communion table should be made, namely, of wood: 'mensa ex asseribus composita juncta.' (See Cardwell's Synodalia, vol. 1, p. 123.) Therefore, beyond all doubt, in Queen Elizabeth's reign, the communion table was not only moveable, but made of wood. In the reign of James the First, the present canons were published; and the 82nd, though it does not expressly say, as that of 1571, that the table shall be 'ex asseribus juncta,' directs that it shall be a 'decent table,' and be placed, when the holy communion is to be administered, 'in so good sort, within the church or chancel, as thereby the minister may be more conveniently heard of the communicants in his prayer and ministration.' That it is to be moveable is implied by its having a different position at one time and at another."

[After referring to the contests respecting the mode of administering the holy communion in the reign of Charles the First, and reading and commenting upon a passage from Lord Clarendon's History of the Rebellion, in which he speaks of Archbishop Laud's proceedings regarding the position of the communion table, and implies that it was then not of stone and not fixed, but moveable, referring also to the part taken by Williams, bishop of Lincoln, in the dispute, the learned judge read copious extracts from a tract, entitled The Holy Table, Name and Thing, printed at Lincoln, 1637, and attributed to Bishop Williams, wherein reference is made to a dispute between the vicar of Grantham and his parishioners, respecting the proper place in which the holy table should stand, the vicar insisting that it should stand at the upper end of the chancel, against the east wall; the parishioners contending for the body of the church: the bishop, being appealed to, gave his decision that the table should stand, when not used, in the upper end of the chancel, "not altar-wise, but table-wise," and when used, "the churchwardens are to cause the clerk or sexton to remove it either to the place where it stood before, or any other place in church or chancel where the minister may be most audibly heard of the whole congregation;" and with reference to an alleged threat of the vicar that he would set up a stone altar, the bishop says, "You may not erect an altar where the canons admit only a communion table." The judge also referred to other tracts upon the same subject, (i. e., the position of the table,) taking different sides of the controversy, namely, Antidotum Lincolnense, 1637, by Dr. Heylin; Allare Christianum, 1637, by Dr. Pocklington; Superstitio Superstes, 1641; and a Discourse of Proper Sacrifice, 1644, by Sir Ed. Dering.]

"Therefore, at this time (in 1637) things stood in precisely the same state as they did in the reigns of Edward the Sixth, and Elizabeth; there was a complete annihilation of the ancient structures; the tables were no longer immovable; they were no longer of stone; they were of wood, and moveable. From this time, I cannot see that any alteration was made in any of the rubrics of the Book of Common Prayer till the time of the Restoration. Two instances were adverted to in the argument, as shewing that the proper place for the table was considered to be altar-wise at the east end of the chancel, there to remain; but upon an examination of those cases, it appears to me that they go the other way. The cases are, that of Crayford church, in 1633, and that of the church of St. Gregory, London, in the same year, and although the tables are directed to stand at the upper end of the chancel, it is not said permanently; and in the latter it is expressly stated that its position might be changed as the ordinary 'may find cause.' And so in the 'Orders and Directions for the Diocese of Norwich,' by Bishop Wren, 1636, 'that the communion table in every church do stand always close under the east wall of the chancel of the church, the ends thereof north and south, unless the ordinary give particular direction otherwise.'

"Then we come to the real point: has any alteration been since made? Did the rubric of 1662 introduce any variation? The word 'table' is used throughout, and the present rubric affords no reason to suppose that any different sense was attached to the word than that which is given to it by common use. There is also a provision in the rubric for the communion service, guarding against any superstition connected with the bread and wine used in the ceremony, following up the alterations made in the reign of Edward the Sixth, with reference to the superstitions associated with the doctrine of transubstantiation. And looking at the word 'table' itself, as used in the rubric, would any one suppose that it meant such an object as is represented by the model before the court? Any flat surface raised from the ground, and supported by pillars or otherwise, may be called a table; but a stone table of such a weight and such dimensions, imbedded in the floor, does not correspond with the ordinary and popular meaning of the word. Upon my construction of the rubrics, therefore, I have no doubt that the article was meant to be a table in the popular sense of the word, and I have no difficulty in holding that the faculty in this case cannot issue.

"With respect to the credence table, I do not find sufficient information to enable me to judge when these tables were first introduced. It is clear that they were in use in the English churches before the time of Archbishop Laud, because he refers to his use of one as an article of accusation against him, and justifies himself by representing that the table had been used by his predecessors, and, amongst others, by Bishop Andrews; but it was considered that this was strong proof of his desire to introduce popish rites and ceremonies. The derivation of the term 'credence table' is referred to the Italian language, and it is said to mean what Archbishop Laud calls it, 'a sideboard.' The question is not of much importance; but in Adelung's German Dictionary we have the following definition of the word: 'Credenzen, from the Italian "credensare," to taste beforehand the meats and drink before they report(1)(2) as having offended against the said laws, it shall be lawful for the bishop of the diocese within which the offence is alleged or reported to have been

are offered to be enjoyed by another: an ancient court-practice, which was performed by the cup-bearers and carvers, who for this reason were also called credenszer: hence also the credens-teller, credence plate, on which the cup-bearers credensed the wine; and in general a plate on which a person offers anything to another; credens-tische, credence table, or sideboard, an artificial cupboard, with a table, for the purpose of arranging in order and keeping the drinking apparatus therein.

"I am of opinion that the credence table must follow the same principle as the other; for, though in use in the Greek and Latin churches, it forms no part of the fittings-up of our churches, and is not to be considered a communion table, or part of a communion table, in the proper meaning of the term.

"I am bound, therefore, to refuse to confirm the faculty granted by the court below, from a conscientious impression in my own mind that it never was the intention, from the time of the Reformation, when stone altars were removed, to continue articles of this description; for I cannot conceive how it differs from an altar in a Roman catholic church, except that it has not received consecration; with this exception, having two open fronts and two upright slabs, it does not materially differ from the tombs of the martyrs as described by Cardinal Bona.

"I pronounce for the appeal, reverse the sentence appealed from, and I am bound in justice to Mr. Faulkner to condemn the churchwardens in the costs of the proceedings on the appeal."

[The foregoing report was communicated to the Editor by the learned Reporter of the Ecclesiastical Notes of Cases.]

(1) Concerning whom there may exist scandal or evil report:—An ecclesiastical court may entertain a suit against a clergyman for the purpose of deprivation of or suspension from his ecclesiastical preferment, by reason of a public scandal existing against him; although the scandal originates from a charge which, if true, would constitute a criminal offence cognizable solely in a common law court; and although no conviction by the common law is pleaded. Thus, in the office of the Judge promoted by Barber v. —, (3 Curt. 822,) which was a cause of office and a proceeding under Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, and was brought into the court of Arches by letters of request from the Bishop of —, it appeared by the decree, which had issued in pursuance, and on acceptance of these letters, that the reverend gentleman therein named was called on to answer to certain articles, heads, positions, or interrogatories, touching or concerning his deprivation of or suspension from his ecclesiastical offices and preferment. The object sought was not pro salute animæ, or pro reformatione morum, but the court was asked to pronounce a sentence of suspension from, or deprivation of his clerical functions as against this gentleman.

The articles were given in, and stood for admission; the party cited then undertook to shew cause, why he should not be suspended or deprived from the exercise of his ecclesiastical offices and preferments, and so the matter came before the court. The articles were eighteen in number; in the first place, they set forth that, by the general laws ecclesiastical, all clerics and ministers in holy orders were enjoined to abstain from all immorality, obscenity, and indecency whatever. The second article pleaded, that the party cited was a priest or minister in holy orders; and was, in the year, &c., duly elected one of the perpetual priests, vicar choral, or minor canons of the said cathedral church. The third article exhibited the proper instruments of appointment to these offices. The fourth article pleaded, that the same party was in the year — licensed by the Bishop of — to perform the office of lecturer in the parish church of, &c.; that he entered upon the duties of such lectureship, and had ever since continued to act, and acted as lecturer to the said church. The fifth article exhibited the episcopal license. The sixth pleaded that the party was, on &c., duly admitted and instituted to the vicarage of —. The seventh exhibited the usual document in supply of proof. The eighth, that the party was, on, &c., duly appointed chaplain to the county gaol. The remaining articles set forth the charge brought against this gentleman, and detailed the facts and particular circumstances, which were, when proved, to subject him to deprivation or suspension.

It was contended that these articles were not admissible, because the court was incompetent to try the charge on which this suit was founded, and was therefore prohibited from entertaining the suit. That temporal offences, of whatever nature they be, were not examinable in the spiritual courts, which decided on written evidence, and that if the court had jurisdiction, every archdeacon had the same authority. That the court of Arches could take no cognizance whatever, either for examining into a charge, or punishing a party if convicted in a temporal court; as regarded a clergyman, the court of Arches had no jurisdiction to examine into a temporal crime, in the first instance, but that if the party be convicted in a temporal court, there arose out of that conviction a fame or scandal, which the ecclesiastical court might take cognizance of, in order to found a suit for punishing the party by ecclesiastical censures, by suspension, or by deprivation. That the scandal in the latter case arose out of the conviction, not out of the charge; and that the law considered every party charged to be innocent until he be proved guilty, and that the only legal proof of guilt was a conviction by oral evidence in a temporal court. *Nash v. It was contended by the counsel in support of the articles: That all ecclesiastical jurisdiction might be comprised under three heads: 1st, ratione privilegii, or personarum; 2nd, ratione causarum; 3rd, ratione loci. That as a general proposition, the amotion or expulsion of a member was incident to a corporation aggregate, (Newcombe v. Higges, Fitzg. 169.) such privilege being incident to the established church, and was exercised by the ecclesiastical courts. That this might be proved, first, by practice, Lyndw. l. 2, tit. 2, pp. 92, 96; l. 3, tit. 28, p. 260; tit. 29, p. 268; l. 5, tit. 5, p. 292; tit. 9, p. 308; tit. 14, p. 313; tit. 15, p. 315; secondly, by the statutes passed from Edward the First to Henry the Eighth relating to the purgation of clerks convict, which were collected in Gibson, pp. 1120 to 1132. That Searle's case, (Hob. 121,) was a solitary case, which occurred at a time when the ecclesiastical courts were struggling for their very existence; (see the conference between Archbishop Bancroft and Lord Coke, 2 Inst. 598.) Slader v. Smalbrooke, (1 Lev. 138; 1 Sid. 217,) occurred after the Restoration; in that case the ecclesiastical court was proceeding to try a forgery, and yet a prohibition was denied: that Higgon v. Coppinger, (Jon. Sir W. 320,) illustrated the principle, so did Lucy v. Watson (Dr.), Bishop of St. David's, (Ld. Raym. 447; 14 St. Tr. 447,) which shewed, that the bishop might punish his clergy by deprivation or ecclesiastical censures for offences contrary to their ecclesiastical duties and vows. That an indictment at law for an offence similar to that under consideration would not lie if framed in the mode used in the articles: that Regina v. Rowed, (3 Q. B. 180,) the Bishop of Clogher's case, (Annual Register for the year 1822,) and Free v. Burgoyne, (5 B. & C. 404; 1 Dow & C. 115; 2 Bligh N. S. 65,) had completely established the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts to proceed, in a case of this nature, for the purposes of deprivation of or suspension from clerical functions or offices: and that the proceedings were not for punishment, but were brought diverso intuitu et diversis rationibus.

Counsel in reply argued, that the case in Levinz's Reports was a proceeding as to which the ecclesiastical courts had undoubted jurisdiction; and that the question of forgery was incidental to the inquiry; therefore, a prohibition was well denied, that it might with equal reason be contended that the ecclesiastical court could not take cognizance of a question of granting probate, because a will was opposed on the ground of forgery. And that the court had no jurisdiction in the matter. Price v. Clark, 3 Hagg. 270.

Upon such facts and arguments, Sir Herbert Jenner Fust observed: "In support of the objection, that the ecclesiastical courts have no jurisdiction in the present case, the court has been referred to several cases, recording instances, where it has been held, that this court is not at liberty to proceed, for the punishment of offenders, for charges for which they are liable to be proceeded against and convicted in criminal courts; several of these instances being cases against clergymen, or persons holding spiritual or ecclesiastical offices. As a general proposition, this doctrine must be acceded to; the question is, whether, for the purpose for which this suit is brought, this court has not jurisdiction where the party proceeded against is a clergyman? As against laymen, whatever may be the nature of the charge, undoubtedly the court has no jurisdiction to entertain a criminal suit; but it is by no means so clear, that, for the purpose of suspension from clerical offices, the court cannot proceed against a clergyman. The distinction arises from the different object of the proceedings against a layman and a clergyman; and, admitting the general rule, that the ecclesiastical court cannot proceed against either a layman or a clerk in orders for the purpose of punishment, the question is, whether, as against the latter person, it may not proceed to try the charge for the purpose of suspending or depriving the offender from clerical duties and preferment?

"The case of Free v. Burgoyne, (5 B. & C. 404; 1 Dow & C. 115; 2 Bligh N. S. 65,) both in the King's Bench and the House of Lords, proceeded on this ground,—that the spiritual court had no cognizance of a crime punishable in the temporal courts, except for the purpose of deprivation from ecclesiastical offices; I confess it appears to me to go a great length in support of the proceedings in the present case, which are instituted against this gentleman, not for punishing him for a temporal offence, but to prevent him retaining possession of the ecclesiastical preferment which he now holds.

"I was referred, in the course of the argument, to the case of the Bishop of Clogher; (Annual Register for the year 1822;) I have not a copy of the proceedings in that case, nor have I been able to obtain them; the bishop certainly was outlawed, but still, it was held, that as bishop he was liable to be proceeded against and deprived of his see for the offence imputed to him; the outlawry might have been equivalent to a conviction, and so far this would be a different case. Reference was also made to another case; it was not described by any title, but as a case before the judicial committee, on an appeal from the island of Jersey [since reported, nom. The Dean of Jersey v. The Rector of —, 3 Moore's P. C. Ca. 299]. A writ, in the nature of a writ of prohibition, issued from the royal court in that island, to the ecclesiastical court, whereby that former court annulled certain proceedings in the ecclesiastical court, and ordered, that all the acts five persons, of whom one shall be his vicar-general, or an archdeacon or rural dean within the diocese, for the purpose of making inquiry as to the grounds of such which referred thereto should be erased from the records of the court. From this last sentence there was an appeal to her majesty in council; and I may here say, that the royal court in Jersey corresponds, to some extent, with the court of Queen's Bench in this country. The judicial committee came to the opinion, that the writ had issued wrongfully, and they reversed it; in the result it was held, that the ecclesiastical court in Jersey was at liberty to institute that particular proceeding. When that case was before the judicial committee, I sat as one of the judges, and I pronounced the judgment of their lordships; the case turned on the construction of the canons by which the ecclesiastical law in the island of Jersey is governed, and on one canon in particular, the 17th. It provides, 'That every one of the ministers shall be careful to observe that decency and gravity of apparel which becomes his profession, and may preserve due respect to his person; and they shall be very circumspect in the whole course of their lives, to keep themselves from such company, actions, and haunts, as may bring any blame or blemish upon them. Nor shall they dishonour their calling by games, taverns, usuries, trades, or occupations not befitting their functions, but shall study to excel all others in purity of life, gravity, and virtue.' The 22nd Canon is directed against particular offences, and, amongst them, fornication, and applies equally to the clergy as to the laity. It was held, by the court royal, that, under this general canon, the ecclesiastical court had no power to take cognizance of offences triable in the temporal courts; but the judicial committee held, that, under the 17th Canon, and another, (the 46th,) the ecclesiastical court had power to proceed against members of the church and clerks in holy orders; for the purpose of restraining them in such habits of life. The result of the judgment of the Privy Council was to relax the prohibition, and to allow the ecclesiastical court in Jersey to proceed.

"That case is somewhat of a similar description with the present, for it was there alleged, 'That rumours of a most serious nature had for some time past been publicly circulated touching the conduct of ———; accusing him of leading a most scandalous life, and of having committed indecent as well as criminal acts; to the great scandal of religion, and especially of the established church of which he is a minister.'

"That case does seem to me to go the length of declaring, that the ecclesiastical court has jurisdiction over clerks in holy orders, for the purpose of deprivation and suspension; although, to a certain extent, that may be punishment; but still punishment is not the object of the proceeding; the object is to remove the party from the office in relation to which he has so misconducted himself. I am of course now considering that the facts charged in these articles may be established in proof; and the court does not mean to go in detail through these articles; I do not understand them to charge an actual offence, but a series of acts obscure and indecent in themselves. This person was the chaplain of a jail, and in the course of that duty a person was committed to his care and superintendence; and the charge is that of vicious propensities existing, and to be proved by overt acts. In the case from Jersey it was argued, that as the offence was laid, evidence of actual guilt might be given, but that objection was disallowed, and it was said, it was a proceeding to remove a scandal, and that the possibility of such evidence being given, was no ground for issuing the prohibition. Surely! no clergyman can be suffered to remain in the cure or possession of an ecclesiastical benefice whilst labouring under such an imputation as these articles charge; it may be mere report, but still it is a scandalous report, and it arises out of conduct. I should like to know how parishioners can receive the communion, hear the prayers of the church read, or receive consolation in their dying moments, from a person labouring under such imputations as are here charged? Are his parishioners to receive advice or consolation at the hour of death from this party? Must not the effect of the ecclesiastical court has no jurisdiction to interfere in such a case, be, that the parishioners, from the actual disgust which must arise even from the imputation whilst unfuted, will abstain from any communication with the party; and, if he be allowed to remain in his benefice, will not the effect be virtually to deprive the parishioners of all of those spiritual offices and benefits which they are entitled to expect and require at the hands of their minister?

"I am, therefore, of opinion, both upon principle, and the authority of the cases to which I have referred, that there is no ground whatever for concluding the jurisdiction of this court; and I consider that this court has jurisdiction to examine into this case for the purpose of deprivation and suspension; and not only to entertain the suit, but to pronounce a sentence either of suspension or deprivation as may seem meet to this court, and according to the magnitude of the offence, to be shown by the evidence to be produced against the clergyman against whom these charges are made; provided the charges be substantiated in evidence. I am, therefore, of opinion, that these articles are admissible and accordingly, I admit them to proof."

(2) Scandal or evil report.—In Barrie v. ———, (3 Cart. 838,) it was held, that the minutes of the resolution of vestry justices respecting the improper conduct of the chaplain to a jail were not evidence against the chaplain; Sir Herbert Jenner thus stating:—

"I think, however, that there is one of the concluding articles which is not admissible. This reverend person appears, in addition to his other preferment, to hold the office of chaplain of a jail, and it is against him in the discharge of his duties of that office, that this offence is imputed. The article is the seventeenth, and it refers to inquiries made privately by the visiting justices of the jail; and the conclusion to which they came, namely, that the party should be suspended from his office, whereupon he resigned his appointment; and the article has annexed a paper purporting to be a true copy of the minutes of the resolution of the visiting justices, as entered upon the journals of the jail. I cannot see how this can be made evidence in any way; I cannot see how, because these justices take upon themselves to inquire into a certain report, and upon the evidence they receive in the course of that investigation, feel bound to exercise the discretionary power reposed in them, and to suspend this party from his office of chaplain, that can be evidence against the party in this cause. With respect to the evidence to be adduced, this is not the time to enter upon a discussion of, or to give any opinion upon that point; the parties by whom these charges are to be proved, may, as has been said, be persons whose testimony will not be entitled to receive any credit; it may prove so, but the court cannot determine, à priori, whether they are or not competent to give evidence; or whether their testimony will or will not be sufficient.

"Therefore, at the present moment, I content myself with rejecting the seventeenth article; admitting the rest of the articles to proof; and reserving all questions until hearing of the cause."

(1) Notice of the intention to issue such commission under the hand of the bishop:—In reference to the foregoing language, Sir Herbert Jenner Fust, in Sanders v. Head, (3 Curt. 48,) observed:

"I consider the notice as a preliminary proceeding, in order to institute further proceedings before the commissioners, which further proceedings are themselves only preliminary proceedings. I think in this case, the notice is not to be considered as part of the proceedings, but merely as preliminary."

"It is stated in the sixteenth section of the act, 'Provided always, that the archbishop or bishop who shall have issued the commission hereinbefore mentioned in any such case, or who shall have heard any such case, or shall have sent any such case by letters of request to the court of appeal of the province, shall not sit as a member of the judicial committee on an appeal in that case.' So that any bishop or member of the Privy Council who has issued a commission could not sit, but any bishop who has sent the notice might: there is nothing to prevent him from sitting."

"I consider this, as only a preliminary step to inform the party, that proceedings may be issued against him, but as no part of the proceedings whatever. I think this same interpretation applies with reference to the other sections of the act of parliament."

The following is the form of commissions issued in the diocese of Norwich, when clergymen refuse and neglect to perform their ministerial duties [Ex relat. J. Kitson, Esq., secretary of the Bishop of Norwich]:

"Edward, by divine permission, Bishop of Norwich, to our beloved in Christ, the Reverend C—— C——, clerk, vicar of ——, one of the rural deans of the deanery of ——; the Reverend R—— H——, clerk, vicar of ——; the Reverend E—— E——, clerk, rector of ——; the Reverend A—— M——, clerk, rector of ——; and the Reverend T—— T—— U——, clerk, rector of ——, all in the county of Norfolk, and within our diocese of Norwich, greeting. Whereas the Reverend A. B. clerk, rector of the rectory and parish church of M——, in the said county of Norfolk and our said diocese of Norwich, is charged with an offence against the laws ecclesiastical, to wit, by refusing and neglecting to perform his ministerial duty: and whereas we, rightly and duly proceeding under the authority and in conformity with the provisions of a certain act of parliament passed in the session of parliament held in the third and fourth years of the reign of her present majesty, entitled, 'An Act for the better enforcing Church Discipline,' did on the —— day of —— now last past, being fourteen days at the least before the issuing of this our commission, send notice under our hand to the said A. B., that it was our intention to issue a commission under our hand and seal to five persons, one of whom should be our vicar-general, or an archdeacon or rural dean within our diocese, for the purpose of making inquiry into the grounds of such charge: We therefore, by virtue and in further pursuance of the said recited act, do of our own mere motion issue this our commission to you the said C—— C——, the rural dean aforesaid, R—— H——, E—— E——, A—— M——, and T—— T—— U——, for the purpose of making inquiry as to the grounds of the aforesaid charge: and we do hereby authorize and empower you to make such inquiry, and to proceed in the execution of this commission in the manner directed by the said recited act. Given under our hand and seal the —— day of ——, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ——, and in the —— year of our consecration."

"EDWD. NORWICH." (L.S.)

(2) Intimation of the nature of the offence:—Doubts have existed whether a general intimation of the offence will be sufficient, or whether time and place ought to be named and adhered to. The inquiry is in every respect preliminary, not final or conclusive; and it seems no greater degree of particularity is positively required, than that which is generally observed in a ministerial summons.

(2) In the first instance:—In the office of the judge promoted by Sanders v. Head, (3 Curt. 32,) it appeared that the Bishop of Exeter gave notice of his intention of issuing a commission for the purpose of making inquiry as to the grounds of certain charges against a clerk in orders, under Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, s. 3; and without withdrawing such notice, his lordship issued letters of request to the Arches court of Canterbury. It was held, that the letters of request were sent to the Arches in the first instance, as required by the 13th section of the statute. Sir Herbert Jenner Fust observing: ". . . Considering the notice as not a commencement of the proceedings, so as to bar the bishop of the right of sending the case to this court; sufficient prima facie ground for instituting proceedings, and before the filing of the articles, but not afterwards, to send the case by letters of request to the court of appeal (1) of the province, to be there heard and determined according to the law and practice of such court: provided always, that the judge of the said court may and he is hereby authorized and empowered from time to time to make any order or orders of court for the purpose of expediting such suits or otherwise improving the practice of the said court, and from time to time to alter and revoke the same: provided also, that there shall be no appeal from any interlocutory decree or order not having the force or effect of a definitive sentence, and thereby ending the suit in the court of appeal of the province, save by the permission of the judge of such court.

“XIV. And be it enacted, that in every case in which, from the nature of the offence charged, it shall appear to any bishop within whose diocese the party accused may hold any preferment, that great scandal is likely to arise from the party accused continuing to perform the services of the church while such charge is under investigation, or that his ministration will be useless while such charge is pending, it shall be lawful for the bishop to cause a notice to be served on such party at the same time with the service of a copy of the articles aforesaid, or at considering it not necessary that the letters of request should contain the name and description of the person on whose application or at whose mere motion the case was commenced in the first instance: I overrule the protest. I entertain no difficulty whatever in the case. I assign the party to appear absolutely.”

The decision was appealed from, but was affirmed by the judicial committee of the Privy Council, and the cause remitted to the Arches court.

(1) Court of appeal.—Where, after a commission of inquiry, a case is sent, under Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, s. 13, to the court of appeal of the province by the bishop of the diocese, within which the clerk proceeded against holds preferment, the articles must be confined to offences committed within that diocese; and commissioners, under the 3rd section, are bound to confine their inquiry within the diocese of the bishop who issues the commission.

Thus, in the office of the judge promoted by Homer & Bloomer v. Jones, (9 Jurist, 167,) which was a question as to the admissibility of certain articles against a clergyman for incontinency, the case was brought before the court by letters of request from the Bishop of Worcester. The requisite proceedings under the statute had taken place, and the commissioners reported, that there was prima facie ground for instituting further proceedings. The articles then brought in, pleaded several acts of incontinency committed within the diocese of Worcester, but the 6th pleaded an act of adultery committed in the city of Lichfield.

It was urged, in opposition to the articles, that this 6th article was inadmissible under Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, as it charged a clergyman holding preferment in one diocese with the commission of an offence in another. And that the article was not only inadmissible in itself, but that it vitiated the rest of the articles, because the whole of the present proceeding was founded upon the report of the commissioners, and non constat, that they did not make their report upon the evidence given in support of the particular charge, into which they had no business to have inquired. But it was contended upon the opposite side, that although the Bishop of Worcester could not have investigated this charge, yet the court, which had jurisdiction over the whole of the province, might, and, therefore, the article was admissible. Upon such facts and arguments, Sir Herbert Jenner Past observed: “This is a criminal proceeding under an act of parliament, intitled, ‘An Act for better enforcing Church Discipline,’ the 23rd section of which enacts, ‘that no criminal suit or proceeding against a clerk in holy orders of the united church of England and Ireland for any offence against the laws ecclesiastical, shall be instituted in any ecclesiastical court, otherwise than as hereinbefore enacted or provided.’ It is, therefore, quite clear, that these proceedings must be strictly according to the statute. The 6th of the articles contains a charge of adultery against this clergyman, and this act of adultery is alleged to have been committed in the city of Lichfield. The diocese of Lichfield, I must presume, extends over the city of Lichfield. The party proceeded against holds preferment in the diocese of Worcester, and the commission was issued by the Bishop of Worcester. It is very certain that he, the Bishop of Worcester, could not take any notice under the statute of the offence, which was committed beyond his jurisdiction. But it is said, that, although the bishop could not, yet that this court, as possessing jurisdiction throughout the whole province of Canterbury, might receive the charge. Now, the case is sent here by letters of request, which letters embody the proceedings before the commissioners, and these proceedings are the very foundation of the case before this court. I am of opinion, that the commissioners can proceed only within the diocese of the bishop who issues the commission; and I must presume that they have bounded their inquiries, as they ought to have done, within that limit; and I, therefore, reject this article.”

any time pending any proceedings before the bishop or in any ecclesiastical court, inhibiting the said party from performing any services of the church within such diocese from and after the expiration of fourteen days from the service of such notice, and until sentence shall have been given in the said cause: provided that it shall be lawful for such party, being the incumbent of a benefice, within fourteen days after the service of the said notice, to nominate to the bishop any fit person or persons to perform all such services of the church during the period in which such party shall be so inhibited as aforesaid; and if the bishop shall deem the person or persons so nominated fit for the performance of such services he shall grant his licence to him or them accordingly, or in case a fit person shall not be nominated the bishop shall make such provision for the service of the church as to him shall seem necessary, and in all such cases it shall be lawful for the bishop to assign such stipend, not exceeding the stipend required by law for the curacy of the church belonging to the said party, nor exceeding a moiety of the net annual income of the benefice, as the said bishop may think fit, and to provide for the payment of such stipend, if necessary, by sequestration of the living: provided also, that it shall be lawful for the said bishop at any time to revoke such inhibition and licence respectively.

“XV. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for any party who shall think himself aggrieved by the judgment pronounced in the first instance by the bishop, or in the court of appeal of the province, to appeal from such judgment; and such appeal shall be to the archbishop, and shall be heard before the judge of the court of appeal of the province, when the cause shall have been heard and determined in the first instance by the bishop, and shall be proceeded in in the said court of appeal in the same manner and subject only to the same appeal as in this act is provided with respect to cases sent by letters of request to the said court; and the appeal shall be to the queen in council, and shall be heard before the judicial committee of the Privy Council, when the cause shall have been heard and determined in the first instance in the court of the archbishop.

“XVI. And be it enacted, that every archbishop and bishop of the united church of England and Ireland, who now is or at any time hereafter shall be sworn of her majesty's most honourable Privy Council, shall be a member of the judicial committee of the Privy Council for the purposes of every such appeal as aforesaid; and that no such appeal shall be heard before the judicial committee of the Privy Council unless at least one of such archbishops or bishops shall be present at the hearing thereof; provided always, that the archbishop or bishop who shall have issued the commission hereinbefore mentioned in any such case, or who shall have heard any such case, or who shall have sent any such case by letters of request to the court of appeal of the province, shall not sit as a member of the judicial committee on an appeal in that case.

“XVII. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful in any such inquiry for any three or more of the commissioners, or in any such proceeding for the bishop, or for any assessor of the bishop, or for the judge of the court of appeal of the province, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such deeds, evidences, or writings, as may be necessary; and such bishop, judge, assessor, and commissioners respectively shall have the same power for these purposes as now belong to the Consistorial court and to the court of Arches respectively (1).

“XVIII. And be it enacted, that every witness who shall be examined in pursuance of this act shall give his or her evidence upon oath or upon solemn affirmation in cases where an affirmation is allowed by law instead of an oath, which

“XIX. Provided always, and be it enacted, that nothing hereinbefore contained shall prevent any person from instituting as voluntary promoter, or from prosecuting, in such form and manner and in such court as he might have done before the passing of this act, any suit which, though in form criminal, shall have the effect of asserting, ascertaining, or establishing any civil right, nor to prevent the archbishop of the province from citing any such clerk before him in cases and under circumstances in and under which such archbishop might, before the passing of this act, cite such clerk under and in pursuance of a statute passed in the twenty-third year of the reign of King Henry the Eighth, intituled, ‘An Act that no Person shall be cited out of the Diocese where he or she dwelleth, except in certain Cases.’”

“XX. And be it enacted, that every suit or proceeding against any such clerk in holy orders for any offence against the laws ecclesiastical shall be commenced within two years after the commission of the offence (1) in respect of which the suit

(1) Every suit or proceeding . . . shall be commenced within two years after the commission of the offence.—In the office of the judge promoted by Titchmarsh v. Chapman (Clerk), (3 Curt. 703,) it appeared that on the 20th of May, 1843, a decree, founded on letters of request from the Bishop of Ely, issued from the court of Arches, citing the Reverend William Herbert Chapman, clerk in holy orders, rector of Bassingbourn, in the county of Cambridge, to appear, and answer to certain heads, positions, or interrogatories, and more especially, for having within the diocese of Ely, offended against the laws ecclesiastical, by refusing a second time, on the 26th of May, 1841, to bury the corpse or body of Jane Rumbold, spinster, (an infant,) a parishioner of the parish of Bassingbourn, when duly applied to on that behalf, after convenient notice or warning given on both occasions, (the first whereof occurred on or about the 17th of February, 1840,) without any just or sufficient cause on either occasion.

The party cited appeared under protest, by reason, that the 20th section of Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, provides, “that every suit or proceeding against any clerk in holy orders, for any offence against the laws ecclesiastical, shall be commenced within two years after the commission of the offence in respect of which the suit or proceeding shall be instituted, and not afterwards.” That by the first refusal, in February, 1840, the offence, if any, was complete, and that the time limited by the statute, for proceeding in such case, expired before the service of the citation.

Upon these facts, Sir Herbert Jenner Just delivered judgment in the following language: “I have, since the last court day, looked into all the cases and authorities, and have considered the arguments, addressed to the court, upon the principles and decisions of those cases; the result I have arrived at is this, that in the present stage of the cause, there is not sufficient to stop the proceedings in limine. I am, therefore, prepared to overrule the protest; but I do not think it advisable to enter into a discussion of the principles of the several cases, because, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, I may possibly be forestalling the arguments at the hearing, either for the prosecution, or for the defence. I will, therefore, merely state the grounds on which I think I ought to require an absolute appearance by the party cited.

“This is a proceeding against the Rev. W. H. Chapman, clerk in holy orders of the united church of England and Ireland, rector of the rectory and parish church of Bassingbourn, in the county of Cambridge, diocese of Ely, and province of Canterbury: and the charge is, for having offended against the ecclesiastical laws, by refusing a second time, to wit, on the 26th of May, 1841, to bury the corpse or body of Jane Rumbold, spinster, a parishioner of the parish of Bassingbourn, aforesaid, when duly applied to on that behalf, after convenient notice or warning given on both occasions, the first whereof occurred on or about the 17th of February, 1840, and without any just or sufficient cause on either occasion. This is the tenor of the offence which the citation sets forth as the charge against this gentleman.

“The question comes before the court by letters of request, which were presented to, and accepted by the court, from the Bishop of Ely; and a decree, founded on them, issued, which was returned on the 11th of May in the present year. The second application for the burial of the child was on the 26th of May; the citation, founded on the letters of request, called on Mr. Chapman to answer for having offended against the laws ecclesiastical. (The court read the citation.) Therefore, the citation recites, that two applications have been made to this gentleman to bury the corpse of a child of one of the parishioners of the parish of which he is rector, and it states his refusal to do so on both occasions, alleging both refusals to be without just or sufficient cause.

“An appearance was given to this citation under protest; the grounds of the protest or proceeding shall be instituted, and not afterwards; provided always, that whenever any such suit or proceeding shall be brought in respect of an offence for which being, that according to the true intent and construction of the act of parliament, Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, s. 20, the offence was committed and depending on the refusal to the first application, namely, on the 17th of February, 1840; the words of protest are, 'That it appears on the very face of the citation, that the actual offence, if any, was committed without the period prescribed by the limitations of the statute, namely, on the 17th of February, 1840, on which day the wrongful act, if any, must be holden to have been done, according to the true intent and legal interpretation of the statute aforesaid;' this is, the statute limiting proceedings for offences of an ecclesiastical nature; it is known as the act 'For better enforcing Church Discipline;' by it, all proceedings of this nature must be commenced within two years after the commission of the offences, therefore, the ground of protest is, that the offence was committed in February, 1840; and the citation was not served until May, 1843. If the construction contended for at the bar be the true construction and interpretation of the statute, this court has no jurisdiction to inquire into the offence; but the question for the court to decide is, whether a fresh offence was not committed by this gentleman on the 26th of May, 1841, consequently, within the period limited by the act for proceeding against clergymen for offences against the ecclesiastical laws, in ecclesiastical courts. There is some degree of difficulty on the first appearance of this citation; it recites the application made on the 17th of February, 1840; and it recites that such application was not attended to, namely, that the rector refused to bury the corpse on that day, without reasonable cause; on the first blush of the case it might appear that it was intended to proceed against this gentleman for an offence committed in February, 1840, as well as for the offence in May, 1841; this was the doubt and difficulty I felt in this case, not whether an offence was committed in 1841, but whether in truth and fact it was not to be inferred, that it was intended to proceed for both offences. On consideration, however, of the language of the citation, I think that such is not the true construction, for, by the citation itself, the offence is 'for having refused a second time, to wit, &c., being within two years.' I take this to be the true interpretation of the charge contained in the citation.

"Then is this an offence which is capable of being repeated? In that lies the whole strength of the argument in support of the protest. My attention was called, and properly called, by Dr. Phillimore, to the language of the citation, as being deficient in clearness, and authorities were stated, and instances adduced from the Digest and other civil law authorities, to shew, that a citation must be clear and specific;—no doubt it must; and I think, on a due consideration of this whole instrument, that the charge is sufficiently clear, and that the party is only called on to answer for the offence, of having, in 1841, refused to bury this child; which is an offence within the time limited by the statute. The question really is, was this an offence on the 26th of May, 1841? The whole strength of Dr. Harding's argument turns on this; I am clearly of opinion as at present advised, to hold that it is so. It would be, in my opinion, wrong, certainly contrary to anything I have heard, to stop these proceedings in limine, at least without having first heard the circumstances under which the application to bury this child was made a second time. Dr. Harding's argument was founded on cases at common law, actions of trover, trespass, and on the case; I have looked into all the cases cited, and there seems to me to be this distinction, in all these instances the actions arising out of them were limited by act of parliament, and the question turned on this, from what time the particular limitation by statute began to run; there is no necessity to go into the cases,—on principle, when once the cause of suit arises, when that is complete, the statute runs from that time; the only question has been, whether the cause of action was complete at an early period, or at a subsequent time.

Saunders v. Saunders, 2 East, 255. Godin v. Ferris, 2 Hen. Black. 14. Wordsworth (Clerk) v. Harley, 1 B. & Ad. 391.

"In all these cases, in trover, trespass, and action on the case, it must be recollected that the question respects a claim to property between two individuals; that when once the property has been converted, the wrongful act is complete; and that the statute runs from the period, when the offence is complete. These suits regard private rights between two individuals; here the offence is a public offence, a public scandal. It must be borne in mind, that the court knows nothing of the ground for the refusal to bury this corpse; for all the court can know, the child may have been baptized by a clergyman of the church of England; by the rector of this very parish himself: the refusal is not for the reason, that the child was unbaptized: but is a general refusal, as to the cause, of which the court can at present know nothing.

"It seems to me, at present, to be too much to say, that a clergyman may refuse to bury the corpse of a parishioner, and that, because proceedings are not instituted within a certain time, he is to be at liberty to persist in such refusal. The 68th Canon imposes the same punishment for refusing to christen a child, as for refusing to bury a corpse. But, can it be said, that if a child be brought to be baptised, and the minister refuses on one Sunday, and it is brought a second time, that a second refusal would not be an offence; I see, at present, no distinction between the two cases; but, as before said, I will not forestall any arguments which may hereafter be offered. What is the differ-

a conviction shall have been obtained (1) in any court of common law, such suit or proceeding may be brought against the person convicted at any time within six ence between the two cases? Here is a child, for anything that appears, properly baptized, over whose body the clergyman of the parish is bound to read the church burial service: and that child, so far as appears on the citation, is unbaptized; this is a public scandal; and the wrong-doer, as appears on the citation, is the minister of the parish, whose duty it is to bury the child, and, until that is done, as it appears to me, the offence continues. Something was said as to the length of time between the first and second application; that may be matter proper to be hereafter considered, but I do not think, because the corpse was not brought within a definite or specific time, that, therefore, the minister may refuse to bury it; I do not know that there is any specific time, within which a body is to be brought for interment. I well remember a case, (Office of the judge promoted by Gilbert v. Buzzard, 2 Consist. 333,) where the dispute was as to the fees payable for the interment of a corpse in an iron coffin; the party died on the 2nd of March, 1819; proceedings in this court were not taken until July, 1820; and the sentence of the judge was not given until May, 1821. Lord Stowell recommended that the body, which had, to use his own expression, 'remained so long unhonoured,' should be buried without prejudice to the right of the parish, as to the fees to be paid. Therefore, I see no reason in this respect why the rites and services of the church should not have been performed at the period of the second application.

"Under these circumstances, as at present advised, on this citation and letters of request, the charge against this gentleman being for having refused to bury this child in 1841, therefore, within the period of two years limited by the act of parliament; although there is a recital, that the party had, in the first instance, when applied to to bury the corpse, refused, I cannot, in this stage of the proceedings, hold that this is an offence which cannot be committed a second time. The party has apparently not performed a duty incumbent on him. I think the offences may be separated from each other, and that the second refusal may be an offence for which he may be proceeded against; although the first offence may have been committed in February, 1840.

"I overrule the protest, assign the party to appear absolutely, and reserve the costs until the final hearing, or other disposal of the cause."

In Titchmarsh v. Chapman (Clerk), (1 D. & L. 732,) the defendant, as previously stated, was cited in the court of Arches of Canterbury, for refusing a second time, on the 26th of May, A.D. 1841, to bury a corpse, the first refusal appearing on the face of the citation to have been made on the 17th of February, 1840:—it was held, upon a motion for a prohibition, that the decision of the court of Arches, that these refusals constituted distinct offences, was a question involving the construction of the 68th Canon, and, therefore, the ground of an appeal; and not simply a misconstruction of Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, s. 20, and that, consequently, no prohibition could be granted:—

Mr. Justice Wightman observing: "It appears to me that the ecclesiastical court has proceeded on the ground, either that the was a continuing offence, or that the second refusal was a distinct offence in itself against the 68th Canon. If so, that is a question of ecclesiastical cognizance, and the proper remedy is by appeal, if they have proceeded wrongly. The defendant, therefore, seeks to bring before this court, not the construction to be put upon the act of parliament, but that to be put upon the 68th Canon; and were I to consider this as a fit case for a prohibition to issue, I can scarcely conceive any case in which a similar application might not be made."

(1) Offence for which a conviction shall have been obtained.—The following case will tend to illustrate the law of evidence in proving the degradation of a clergyman. In Sandys' case, (1 Irish Circ. Rep. 10,) which was a prosecution upon Stat. 12 Geo. 1, c. 3 s. 1 (Ir.), against a degraded clergyman for marrying two protestants; it was held, that the entry of the sentence of degradation in the book of acts of the Consistorial court, was sufficient proof of the degradation of the prisoner.

The indictment contained several counts: the first of which stated, that Richard Sandys, gentleman, was a degraded clergyman of the united church of England and Ireland, as by law established, and that the said Richard Sandys being then and there such degraded clergyman, "and there, that is to say, on the day and year aforesaid, with force and arms, at Cloneneagh aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, feloniously and unlawfully did celebrate a marriage between one John Lalor, then being a protestant, and one Sarah Howard, then also being a protestant," against the peace and statute.

The other counts varied the charge, by describing the defendant as a degraded clergyman of the "church of Ireland," by describing the parties married as "reputed protestants," by describing the defendant as "a layman, pretending to be a clergyman of," &c., and by charging that he "took upon himself to celebrate," &c.

The statute under which the prisoner was indicted, was 12 Geo. 1, c. 3 (Ir.), entitled, "An Act to prevent Marriages by degraded Clergymen and Popish Priests, and for preventing Marriages consummated from being avoided by Pre-Contracts, and for the more effectual punishing of Bigamy." The first section, after reciting that "clandestine marriages are for the most part celebrated by popish priests and degraded clergymen, to the manifest ruin of several families within this kingdom," for remedy thereof enacts, "that if any popish priest, or reputed popish priest, or person pretending to be a popish priest, or any degraded clergyman, or any layman, pretending to be a clergyman of the church of Ireland, as by law established, shall, after the 25th of April, 1726, celebrate or take upon him to celebrate any marriage between two protestants or reputed protestants, or between a protestant or reputed protestant and a papist, such popish priest, or reputed popish priest, and such degraded clergyman, and layman, pretending to be a clergyman, shall be, and is hereby declared to be, guilty of felony, and shall suffer death as a felon, without benefit of the clergy or of the statute."

Stat. 3 & 4 Gul. 4, c. 102, s. 1, repeals so much of the foregoing enactment, "as declares or enacts that any Roman catholic clergyman who shall celebrate any marriage between two protestants or reputed protestants, or between a protestant or reputed protestant and a Roman catholic, shall be guilty of felony, and suffer death as a felon, without benefit of clergy or of the statute." But the 3rd section enacts, that nothing in this act shall extend, or be construed to extend, "to the repeal of any enactments now in force for preventing the performance of the marriage ceremony by degraded clergymen."

The fact of the defendant having, about twenty years ago, frequently officiated at divine service in the parish church of Maryborough, of which he was curate, and of his name being in the registry-book, certifying births and marriages, was proved. The Rev. T. Harpur, incumbent of Maryborough, proved that he was in Carlow, and took a part in the proceedings when sentence of degradation was pronounced upon the defendant by the Bishop of Leighlin and Ferns.

Mr. Henry Davis, clerk of the registrar of the diocese of Leighlin, produced the book of acts, (the book was entitled thus, in the first page, "Acts had and done in the Consistorial Court of the Diocese of Leighlin, before the Rev. S. T. Roberts, Surrogate of the Worshipful Alexander Hamilton, Esq., LL.D., Vicar-General,") of that diocese from the registrar's office in Carlow, which contained the following entry, after a recital of certain prior proceedings: "On reading over the foregoing answers, his lordship the Lord Bishop of Leighlin and Ferns did pronounce sentence of degradation against the said Richard Sandys, as a priest and deacon of the established church.

"P. PRESTON,

"Registrar of the Consistorial Court of Leighlin, and Notary Public."

The witness stated the signature to be that of Mr. Preston, the registrar, and being cross-examined, stated, that he was clerk to the registrar since 1833; did not know of any sentence being pronounced within his time; did not know whether sentences were or not usually made up in any form, and knew of no other sentence in this case.

The celebration of the marriage was then proved by the parties married, viz., John Lalor and Sarah Lalor, otherwise Howard, who both stated they were protestants.

The defendant, who had no counsel, then produced letters of the orders of a priest, granted on parchment, under seal, by the Bishop of Killala, and submitted that no valid sentence of degradation had been passed upon him, as he had not been duly cited to appear before the Consistorial court of Leighlin, and that even if such sentence had been passed, it had not been sufficiently proved by a mere minute in a book without the production of any document under seal.

Chief Justice Doherty stated, "as to the first objection, it is quite untenable; for where a judgment of a court is given in evidence, it must be taken to have been given after proceedings duly had. As to the second, some difficulties do seem to exist."

It was suggested by amicus curiæ, that, according to the ordinary practice of ecclesiastical courts, the sentence is, and should be made out in form, and certified under seal, and that a mere entry by the registrar, in a book, of the pronouncing such sentence, was not admissible in evidence, for the purpose of proving such sentence, any more than an entry in the book of the clerk of the crown is evidence of a judgment at the assizes, which must be proved by a record regularly made up.

Counsel for the prosecution contended, that the proof given was sufficient, and then mentioned that the defendant had been already twice tried and convicted of similar offences; once before Baron Smith, and once before Chief Baron Joy, on both of which occasions the degradation was proved in the manner now resorted to, and had been each time held sufficient; whereupon

Chief Justice Doherty ruled the evidence to be sufficient, and left the case to the jury, who found the defendant guilty, and sentence of death was recorded.

It would seem to be the practice of the ecclesiastical courts in general, to have sentences made up in regular form, and such a form of sentence in a cause of degradation may be seen in Cunningham, 338. In such a cause the sentence, if made out, would probably be in the hands of the proctor of office who conducted the proceedings against the defendant in the Consistorial court of Leighlin. No search for the sentence was proved, nor was any evidence given to lay a foundation for the reception of the entry in the book of acts, as secondary evidence; it must, therefore, be considered to have been admitted as primary evidence of the defendant's degradation. The small quantity of business transacted in some of the diocesan courts in Ireland, and the consequent want of experience in the officers, may account for the existence of inartificial practice in their proceedings, if such be sometimes discovered.

In the Duchess of Kingston's case, (20 How. St. Tr. 355,) a sentence in a cause of the sentence of degradation were not given in evidence, was not made at the trial. If it had been, it would probably have been found difficult to sustain, as a general proposition, that the sentence of a spiritual court is admissible in evidence, without reading the proceedings upon which it is founded. Is the particular instance of a sentence of degradation, the reason of requiring the superior proceedings to be read, may not be very obvious, or may not apply, but the rule of evidence depend upon general principles not to be forsaken in particular cases. The judgment of a court of law is proved by the record which contains in full the allegations of the parties, showing clearly what is in issue between them. Decrees of courts of equity, as at present framed, and sentences in spiritual courts are drawn in a short form, not reciting the proceedings in a way to show the questions at issue between the parties, and in most cases, it will, perhaps, be found, that a decree or sentence when sought to be given in evidence, will require, to make it admissible, that the bill and answer, or final and answer, be read likewise. 1 Irish Civ. R. p. 13, 14, in not.

charge. On the appointed day the dean attended, but disclaimed the jurisdiction, obstructed the proceedings, was pronounced in contempt, withdrew contumaciously, and did not appear again. The commissary decreed to proceed in person in his absence, and heard counsel and evidence on the charge, refused to hear counsel for the dean till he should purge his contempt, which was not done, and the commissary gave judgment, that the charge proved, and that satisfaction must be passed. The commissary passed sentence, by which he annulled the proceedings, and adjudged the dean committed and was committed to prison, as he was in contempt; deposed him from office and place of dean, and ordered him not in future to use the same, on pain of the same. The visitation was prohibited to the bishop, and the commissary against proceeding further in the matter of the said charge of simony, executing or giving effect to the sentence: it was held, 1. That the inquiry before the commissary was not a mere incident to the visitation, but became a distinct criminal proceeding when the commissary entered upon the examination of proofs, as above stated, with a view to punishment.

2. That such inquiry was a "criminal proceeding" within Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, s. 23, those words not being restrained by the recital of the first section, which mentions only "proceeding in causes for the correction of clerks."

3. That an archbishop or bishop, exercising his general authority as visitor of an ecclesiastical body, (and not visiting under the statutes of a particular foundation,) acts, not personally, but as judge in a court, and must follow established forms of process and inquiry; at least in hearing accusations with a view to punishment. And, therefore,

4. That the proceeding in question was not within the reservation in Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, s. 25, of any authority which the archbishops or bishops may exercise personally, and without process in court. Consequently,

5. That the proceeding could not legally be instituted otherwise than as Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, directs.

6. That a prohibition could not properly have been moved for before the visitor proceeded to sentence; but that it might well be applied for afterwards, as the sentence had a continuing operation; and as the court did not appear to have been dissolved at the time of the motion.

Upon such facts a prohibition was granted, without calling upon the applicant to appear; Lord Denman, after stating the facts, delivering the judgment of the court as follows:

"Prohibition is claimed on various grounds; and that which requires to be first considered is the late act of parliament, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, 'for better enforcing Church Discipline,' which recites 'that the manner of proceeding jactitation of marriage was proposed to be read in evidence on behalf of the defendant, when the attorney-general, for the prosecution, insisted that the libel, allegations, answers, &c., on which the sentence was founded, should also be read, objecting to the reading of the sentence abstractedly from the allegations and other matters upon which that sentence proceeded. Whereupon Lord Camden asked the counsel for the prisoner, whether they meant to object to the whole proceedings in the jactitation cause being read. To which Mr. Wallace, her grace's counsel, said: "I have not, upon the part of the noble prisoner, the least objection that all the proceedings should be brought before your lordships. I conceive that what the officer has now brought before the court, was what is usually given in evidence in such case. I do not recollect any other in any case I have found, being produced, but the sentence, which states in short the proceedings had in that court, but I understand the proceedings are here, and on the part of the noble prisoner there is not the least objection to the whole being laid before the court." The proceedings were then put in. 20 How. St. Tr. 377. The objection, that the proceedings in the cause upon which was founded

the sentence of degradation were not given in evidence, was not made at the trial. If it had been, it would probably have been found difficult to sustain, as a general proposition, that the sentence of a spiritual court is admissible in evidence, without reading the proceedings upon which it is founded. In the particular instance of a sentence of degradation, the reason of requiring the anterior proceedings to be read, may not be very obvious, or may not apply, but the rules of evidence depend upon general principles not to be forsaken in particular cases. The judgment of a court of law is proved by the record which contains in full the allegations of the parties, showing clearly what is in issue between them. Decrees of courts of equity, as at present framed, and sentences in spiritual courts are drawn in a short form, not reciting the proceedings in a way to show the questions at issue between the parties, and in most cases, it will, perhaps, be found, that a decree or sentence when sought to be given in evidence, will require, to make it intelligible, that the bill and answer, or libel and answer, be read likewise. 1 Irish Civ. tuled in any ecclesiastical court, otherwise than is hereinbefore enacted or provided:—

All offences against the laws ecclesiastical, by a clerk in holy orders, are henceforth to be proceeded against according to the regulations prescribed by the Church Discipline Act, and in no other way whatsoever. The mode of procedure before the passing of such statute was by articles in the diocesan or peculiar court, or by letters of request to the court of the metropolitan. Any person, it has been held, may prosecute a clergyman for a neglect of his clerical duty. Nor have the Marriage Acts deprived the ordinary of the power of correcting any of his clergy who may offend against the order of the church in publishing banns, or solemnizing matrimony, in any other manner than that prescribed by law; and also, as it would seem, for refusing to solemnize a marriage after the preliminary conditions required by the law have been satisfied. 3 Burn's E. L. by Phillimore, 364, 365. Vide Sir George Lee's remarks, in Argar v. Holdsworth (ante 1228); Wynn v. Davies, 1 Curt. 69.

In the matter of the Dean of York, (2 Q. B. 2,) it appeared that the Archbishop of York, after the passing of Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, cited the Dean and Chapter of York, (enjoining them to cite the canons, registrar, and officers whose presence might be required,) to appear at a visitation of the dean and chapter, canonically to receive and submit to the archbishop's intended "metropolitan visitation, examinations, due corrections," &c., to exhibit their statutes, &c., if required, pay the due procurations, and further to do and receive what the business and nature of such a visitation require. He also appointed a commissary for holding the visitation in his absence, for correcting and punishing by ecclesiastical censures whoever should be contumacious, for administering articles in writing to the dean and chapter, and receiving their presentments and answers, and for adjourning and proroguing such visitation from time to time and place, and completing and dissolving the same, and for doing every thing else appertaining to the nature and quality of the said visitation. The visitation was holden, and articles of inquiry delivered to the dean and chapter, touching the administration of their funds, performance of divine service, &c. A canon, in reply to an article as to the repair of chancels, sent in a statement imputing simony to the dean, which was afterwards communicated to the dean by a private letter from the commissary. At an adjourned meeting, of which the dean had notice, but which he (unavoidably as he said) did not attend, the canon delivered a fuller statement of the charge from a paper, which was afterwards deposited with the actuary. The commissary appointed a day for hearing evidence; and the dean was requested, by letter, written at the archbishop's desire by his secretary, to attend and meet the accusation. No formal articles or libel were ever exhibited; nor was the dean ever cited to answer any charge. On the appointed day the dean attended, but disclaimed the jurisdiction, obstructed the proceedings, was pronounced in contempt, withdrew contumaciously, and did not appear again. The commissary decreed to proceed in personam in his absence, and heard counsel and evidence on the charge, but refused to hear counsel for the dean till he should purge his contempt, which was not done, and the commissary gave judgment, declaring the charge proved, and that sentence of deprivation must be passed. The archbishop then passed sentence, by which he recited the above proceedings, and adjudged that the dean had committed and was convicted of simony, and was in contempt; deprived him of the dignity and place of dean, &c., and monished him not in future to use the dress or ensigns of a dean, on pain of the greater excommunication. The visitation was then adjourned.

On motion for a prohibition to the bishop and commissary against proceeding further in the matter of the said charge of simony, or executing or giving effect to the sentence: it was held, 1. That the inquiry before the commissary was not a mere incident to the visitation, but became a distinct criminal proceeding when the commissary entered upon the examination of proofs, as above stated, with a view to punishment.

2. That such inquiry was a "criminal proceeding" within Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, s. 23, those words not being restrained by the recital of the first section, which mentions only "proceeding in causes for the correction of clerks."

3. That an archbishop or bishop, exercising his general authority as visitor of an ecclesiastical body, (and not visiting under the statutes of a particular foundation,) acts, not personally, but as judge in a court, and must follow established forms of process and inquiry; at least in hearing accusations with a view to punishment. And, therefore,

4. That the proceeding in question was not within the reservation in Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, s. 25, of any authority which the archbishops or bishops may exercise personally, and without process in court. Consequently,

5. That the proceeding could not legally be instituted otherwise than as Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, directs.

6. That a prohibition could not properly have been moved for before the visitor proceeded to sentence; but that it might well be applied for afterwards, as the sentence had a continuing operation; and as the court did not appear to have been dissolved at the time of the motion.

Upon such facts a prohibition was granted, without calling upon the applicant to appear; Lord Denman, after stating the facts, delivering the judgment of the court as follows:

"Prohibition is claimed on various grounds; and that which requires to be first considered is the late act of parliament, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, 'for better enforcing Church Discipline,' which recites 'that the manner of proceeding in causes for the correction of clerks requires amendment,' repeals the act 1 Hen. 7, c. 4, prescribes the course of proceeding which shall hereafter be observed 'in every case of any clerk in holy orders,' 'who may be charged with any offence against the laws ecclesiastical,' and finally enacts 'that no criminal suit or proceeding against a clerk in holy orders' 'for any offence against the laws ecclesiastical, shall be instituted in any ecclesiastical court otherwise than' according to the provisions of that act. These enactments are, however, qualified by a proviso, 'That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to affect any authority over the clergy of their respective provinces or dioceses, which the archbishops or bishops of England and Wales, may now according to law exercise personally and without process in court.'

"The twenty-third section, enacting that no criminal suit or proceeding shall be instituted in any other manner than this act requires, was relied on as a decisive bar against the trial that has taken place. The counsel for the dean argued, that he, being a clerk in holy orders, was prosecuted in a criminal proceeding for the offence of simony, a known offence against the laws ecclesiastical, and that the authority which assumes to deprive him is an ecclesiastical court, the court of the ordinary holding his visitation. Two answers to this argument are offered. 1. That what has been done is not a criminal proceeding within the meaning of the act. 2. That the proceedings were in virtue of authority exercised by the archbishop, according to the law as it then stood, over a clerk of his province, personally, without process in court.

"The learned counsel against the prohibition observed, in the first place, that the statute applied to causes, a word said to be well understood, and to import suits regularly promoted in the spiritual courts. But the employment of that word in the short preamble affords a most inadequate reason for an arbitrary restriction of the whole act to that form of proceeding which in the ecclesiastical law may be with technical propriety described as a cause. It might as well be restricted to causes promoted for incontinency, the only class punishable under Stat. 1 Hen. 7, of which the repeal is the only object of the same section, after a recital that the manner of proceeding for correction of clerks ought to be amended. But, although the first section is thus limited, the general enactments are extended to all offences; and in like manner, though causes are the only proceedings mentioned in the preamble, the twenty-third section clearly provides, that the cause enjoined by the statute shall be pursued in every criminal suit or proceeding against a clerk in holy orders in the courts ecclesiastical.

"But is this a criminal proceeding, or is it merely an incidental fact arising out of the visitation, in the course of which it is brought to the ordinary's knowledge, and, properly, in the discharge of that duty, inquired into by him, but not instituted as a criminal proceeding? The answer appears to be that, as soon as the visitor proceeds to examine the proofs of an ecclesiastical offence committed by a clerk for the purpose of punishment by deprivation, more especially, as in this case, at the instance of an accuser who avails himself of the aid of a professional advocate, a criminal proceeding is undoubtedly instituted and in full progress.

"There is yet another term in the description of suits or proceedings given by the twenty-third section. They must be in some 'ecclesiastical court.' The ordinary's visitation is said not to be an ecclesiastical court, but to range within the proviso (sect. 23) which prevents the statute from applying to authority personally exercised by the bishop without process in court.

"This brings us directly to the question, whether the bishop, as visitor of a dean and chapter, is legally invested with power to deprive the dean of his office for an ecclesiastical offence without process in court. If he has the power, he must derive it from the general words above cited; but they can scarcely be expected to receive this construction without proof that they have habitually, and in former times, when church discipline was much more active than of late, been so construed, or at least that the learned writers on ecclesiastical law have put that meaning upon them.

"Now, in the first place, there is no example of such a power being exercised by the bishops over their clergy, even in their regular and solemn visitations. They are, indeed, exempted from the forms required by the common law, and are to proceed in the language found in many books and copied in Com. Dig., Visitor (C): 'Summarie, amplexiter, et de plano sine strepitu aut figura judicii;' that is (adds Comyns) according to mere law and right. But some forms, as involving the opportunity of knowing and answering the charges, are absolutely necessary for securing this object. The report of the ecclesiastical commissioners was appealed to on both sides; on the one, for proof that the late statute was not meant to apply to the visitatorial power, because no recommendation to that effect is given. We have frequently had occasion to observe, that the courts have no right to look at similar reports for the direct purpose of construing the statutes founded upon them, which must speak for themselves. On the other hand, the report was referred to as a depository of the former law, which is not, however, there said to have trusted the visitor with the power now claimed. It states that the ordinary was to proceed in the correction of clerks in a kind of forum domesticum. However these words are to be understood, it was still a forum. Spiritual persons who offended were presented by the churchwardens, on whom this duty was cast; if they neglected it, others might present; or, even if common fame were the only accusor, the ordinary might make his inquiries. Different modes of dealing with the charges are enumerated: inquisitio, accusatio, denunciatio articles were exhibited; and the party had time and place given to answer them. Sentence was at length passed by the ordinary, personally, perhaps, but (according to all our experience) in his court, and, in no usual sense of the words, without process. And, on this head of argument, the question was asked, and not satisfactorily answered, why, if the ordinary possessed this power personally and without process, such great difficulties had been encountered, and such enormous expenses incurred in bringing notorious spiritual delinquents to justice by deprivation. It is well known, that the assumed want of the power now claimed formed one strong motive for introducing the new law.

"The saving clause may not improperly have been intended to apply to some other powers of regulation and control, vested by law in the archbishops and bishops; but, if none such could be surmised, still the effect of no such saving clause can be greater than the protection of something that is shewn to have existed, it cannot create authority in any one to act personally and without process in a particular case, by merely saying that the act does not deprive him of such authority in general terms. The precaution secures what the law recognised before; but the question remains—what did the law recognise?"

"We are aware, that the jurisdiction of visitors has been described in most comprehensive terms by common lawyers of high authority. Lord Holt himself is cited as allowing them an arbitrary power, in his often reported judgment on the case of Philips v. Bury, (1 Ld. Raym. 5.) That copy of it taken from his own manuscript, and now printed in 2 T. R. (346) agrees almost word for word with that which is recorded by Skinner (475). Scarcely any other remark upon it requires to be made, than that the case arose out of the visitation of a charitable foundation. Holt's strong language is all applied to that case. The founder might do as he would with his own: the parties deriving benefit from his endowment must abide by the conditions which he has annexed. Cujus est dare ejus est disponere. The Bishop of St. David's v. Lucy, (1 Ld. Raym. 447, 539; 1 Salk. 134; 3 Ibid. 90; 12 Mod. 237; and see 14 How. St. Tr. 447; 1 Burn's E. L. by Phillimore, 231,) where the Archbishop of Canterbury gave sentence of deprivation against one of his suffragan bishops for simony and other ecclesiastical offences, was supposed to shew that power to reside in the breast of the archbishop, without any rules or forms. Prohibition was claimed, on the ground that the citation was to appear at Lambeth, not in the usual place of holding the metropolitan court, and it was answered here by Lord Holt and his brethren, that the archbishop 'may hold his court where he pleases'; that 'the spiritual court might proceed to punish him for any offence done against the duty of his office as bishop;'

adding, 'as the clergy are under different rules and duties, it is but reasonable that, if an ecclesiastical person offend in his ecclesiastical duty, he should be punishable for it in the ecclesiastical court.' These expressions all occur in Salkeld's Report (1 Salk. 134). The bishop was called by citation to answer for his delinquency. The form and mode of proceeding were objected to in no other particular than the place of sitting. We scarcely need say, that this case supplies no evidence of the right to proceed personally without process in court.

"Another case was cited for the same purpose, The Bishop of Kildare v. The Archbishop of Dublin, (2 Bro. P. C. 179, 2nd ed.) brought by writ of error to the House of Lords, 1724. The bishop, as dean of the church of the Holy Trinity, complained that the archbishop proceeded against him in the court Christian for a contempt committed during the visitation. The principal question intended to be raised was, whether the king or the archbishop was the visitor of the dean and chapter of that cathedral; and this being decided in favour of the archbishop, all others respecting the mode of proceeding were comparatively unimportant; nor indeed does the case furnish us with a very full detail of what took place. Enough, however, appears, to shew that the offence was contumacy, committed by shutting the doors of the cathedral against the archbishop, and not appearing in his visitation; and that the archbishop 'impleaded' the plaintiff as dean 'in the court Christian, in caused visitationis ordinarii ipsius archiepiscopi,' 'under pretence of a contempt.' The House of Lords held that the right of the archbishop to visit the dean and chapter was established, and that the manner of his doing so was not at all material, because any error or defect in the manner might be remedied by appeal, and was no foundation for a prohibition: and this is the marginal note appended to the report, the general point being perfectly clear, that, when there is jurisdiction, the manner of exercising it affords no ground for prohibition. But the declaration, instead of alleging that the visitor proceeded to sentence, (whatever that sentence might be, for it is not set forth,) personally and without process, leads to the contrary inference. The words above extracted from it are rather descriptive of a suit afterwards commenced by the archbishop in his court as ordinary; and this even where the offence was a direct contempt of his person and authority. But it is enough to say, and indisputably true, that this case does not establish the proposition, for which alone it was wanted, that the visitor has lawful power to deprive personally, and without process in court.

"So in the Bishop of Exeter's case, (Philips v. Bury, 1 Ld. Raym. 5; Skin. 447; 2 T. R. 346,) the acts of the bishop, having been performed within his jurisdiction as visitor of Exeter college by appointment of the founder, were held to be uncontrollable by it. Such decisions can have no bearing on the present case, unless it were shewn, that all exercised by the archbishop of the province in all cases where the bishop who would the powers which any founder has conferred on his visitor grow out of the relation of an ordinary to his clergy on his holding a visitation of them. It is highly probable, that the use of the same word on two such different occasions has led to the belief that such was the law. The opinion is thus accounted for; but the law can only be established by practice and precedent. Both are wanting here.

"Some of the books speak of a court of visitation; and the phrase is not incorrect. It is an authority acting with certain forms of procedure and inquiry, suspending its proceedings from time to time by adjournment, making certain orders and decrees. Whether or not these acts are of necessity judicial, those done in the course of establishing a charge against a party accused, bear that undoubted character.

"The authority now challenged declared the party in contempt for withdrawing himself after citation, and required him to purge his contempt before he could be heard in his defence against charges preferred. It proceeded then with the examination of witnesses in support of those charges, and finally adjudged him guilty, and awarded sentence of deprivation. All these are assuredly the acts of a court. It is admitted that they may be appealed against; and we are at a loss to conceive an appeal against any proceedings, but those of a court. That court, however, the late statute has divested of all such jurisdiction. It is not within the saving clause, which leaves untouched the ordinary's power over his clergy, as it might then be exercised by law without process in court, because this power does not appear to have been ever exercised by law. We are constrained to conclude, that the most reverend prelate, in so far as he proceeded at his visitation to deprive the dean, has acted without jurisdiction.

"Finding that this preliminary obstacle is not to be surmounted, we decline to enter upon the consideration of the numerous points raised in certain portions of the proceedings, by the learned commissary. But there is one not unfit to be disposed of. The sentence being final, and executed, it was argued that nothing now remained which this court could prohibit from being done, and not even a continuing court to which our writ could be addressed. These arguments, for obvious reasons, require to be narrowly watched, for they would give effect to unlawful proceedings, merely because they were brought to a conclusion. But to the present case they are inapplicable. For, on looking at the sentence, we find that it admonishes the dean not to exercise the functions of dean on pain of the greater excommunication, and that the court was adjourned only when this motion was made. The infliction of that pain would be the mode of enforcing the sentence; and this we may prohibit; and we find in some of the entries that this court has enjoined revocation of the sentence. The dean could not apply before sentence; for the sentence of deprivation is the only thing done which is beyond the jurisdiction of the archbishop. Up to that point he had unquestionably power, for it was his duty to inquire with a view to ulterior proceedings; and it seems, that the lord chancellor discharged an application for prohibition which had been made to him before sentence, on that very ground.

"Our clear conviction is not embarrassed by an opposite judgment formed by the learned commissary; for he does not appear to have adverted to the statute during the whole proceedings. We cannot but believe that it escaped his attention, occupied as it was with a vast variety of unusual circumstances, and not assisted, (as indeed it could not be according to the view which he took of the duties of his office,) by advocates on both sides.

"If we felt any doubt, we should be bound to invite further discussion by calling upon the Dean of York to declare in prohibition: but, after the full and deliberate, long prepared and maturely digested arguments which we have heard enforced with consummate ability, by counsel of the greatest learning, and of the highest reputation, no additional light can be expected. We owe it to all the parties, to save them the inconvenience and anxiety of fruitless delay; we owe it to the public, and in a peculiar manner to the church, to encourage no doubt, when we fail none, on subjects of such immense importance, and so deeply affecting its interests, its rights, and its duties."

In Black v. Rackham, (Ex rel. the learned Reporter of the Ecclesiastical Notes of Cases: Arches court of Canterbury, February 18th, 1845.) which was originally a proceeding in the Consistorial court of Norwich, against a beneficed clergyman, the rector of Walsoken, in that diocese, to recover the penalty imposed by Stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, for having been absent from his benefice, without licence or exemption, for more than three and not exceeding six months in one year, whereby he had forfeited, under the 32nd section of the statute, one third of the annual value of his benefice, which annual value was pleaded to be at least 1100*l.*: upon the party being cited, he did not appear; he was pronounced in contempt, and a significavit issued, whereupon an absolute appearance was given; an allegation was prayed, brought in by the party proceeding, and admitted without objection, a decree for the answers of the party cited was taken out, and the answers not being brought in, a prayer was made to have the allegation taken pro confesso, when the rector for the party cited appeared under protest, alleging that his party was not compelled to give in his answers upon oath, inasmuch as this was a criminal proceeding, and further alleging that all the proceedings had been erroneous, null, and void. The judge in the court below overruled the objections, and pronounced that the allegation had been proved and the forfeiture incurred.

whereupon the party cited appealed to the Arches court.

On the part of the appellant, it was contended that the proceedings should have been by articles, and under Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86; that it was vitiated by errors throughout, and that the proof of non-residence was insufficient. This was a criminal proceeding to punish the party for an ecclesiastical offence, and such a proceeding must be instituted under the Church Discipline Act, according to the doctrine of the court of Queen's Bench, in The Dean of York's case. The proceeding for a penalty made the suit a criminal one: so Lord Hardwicke held in Middleton v. Croft, (2 Atk. 650.) Independent of this general objection, the errors in the proceedings had rendered it a nullity; no proxy was given by the party proceeding in the court below, and the proof of non-residence was limited to evidence of the absence of the party from the rectory house.

On behalf of the respondent, it was argued that none of the objections affected the substantial merits of the case. The proceedings had been perfectly correct, and the proof of non-residence was so full that it could not be carried further. The argument that the proceedings should have been under Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, was equivalent to saying there could be no proceeding at all, for this act made no provision for such a proceeding. The Act 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, was not repealed by the Church Discipline Act. Neither could the proceeding have been by articles, for if so, it must have been under the Church Discipline Act, by which, however, there could be no proceeding against a clerk for non-residence, in "the court of the bishop," in which court, and in no other, the penalties and forfeitures incurred under the Non-Residence Act, could be recovered. The offence was not dealt with as a criminal act, but as a particular offence, under a particular statute, affixing a particular penalty. It was never intended that this should be treated as a criminal proceeding, though, under the canon law, non-residence is a highly penal offence. The Act 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, was passed for the correction of clerks; but this proceeding is to recover a penalty under Stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106.

Sir Herbert Jenner Post said, this being the first proceeding to recover a penalty under the statute, the question was too important to be disposed of at the moment of hearing. He would not say that the case was entirely without difficulty; but he agreed that the question was, whether Stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, was repealed, by implication, by Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86. He must consider the case. [The judgment in this case was not delivered at the time that the foregoing report was sent to press, but it will be published in the Supplement to these volumes, of January, 1846.]

(2) Otherwise than is hereinbefore enacted or provided:—Although section 23 takes away the visitor's power of punishing an offence against the general law of the church, it would probably be held, that he would still be able to enforce the particular statutes of the cathedral subject to his visitation. 3 Burn's E. L. by Phillimore, 364. According to the decision, In the matter of the Dean of York, (2 Q. B. 31,) this clause has taken away any power which the ordinary quid visitor might have possessed of depriving a clerk summarie et sine figura judicii.

(1) Where the bishop . . . is the patron:—"Two courses are open to a bishop who is patron of the preferment of the accused clerk. 1. To send the complaint by letters of request to the court of the province. 2. To substitute, in the first instance, what may be called the personal authority (given by this act) of the archbishop in the place of his own.

"There does not seem to be any provision for a case where the archbishop is himself both patron of the preferment and ordinary of the party accused. The court of Delegates were not capable of accepting letters of request, and it is presumed the judicial committee of the Privy Council are in the same condition. It would appear therefore, that there is a casus omissus in this statute, unless it be held that, as by sect. 1 of this act, the word 'bishop' is to comprehend 'archbishop,' the archbishop, when ordinary and patron, may send the case by letters of request to the judge of the court of appeal of the province, that is, send letters of request to his own chancellor. But this would appear to be a very forced and improbable construction of the act." 3 Burn's E. L. by Phillimore, 364.

“Whereas it is expedient to make further regulations for the release of persons committed to gaol under the writ de contumace capiendo: be it therefore enacted by the queen’s most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that after the passing of this act it shall be lawful for the judicial committee of her majesty’s most honourable Privy Council, or the judge of any ecclesiastical court, if it shall seem meet to the said judicial committee or judge, to make an order upon the gaoler, sheriff, or other officer in whose custody any party is or may be hereafter, under any writ de contumace capiendo already issued or hereafter to be issued, in consequence of any proceedings before the said judicial committee or the judge of the said ecclesiastical court, for discharging such party out of custody; and such sheriff, gaoler, or other officer shall on receipt of the said order forthwith discharge such party: provided always, that no such order shall be made by the said judicial committee or judge without the consent of the other party or parties to the suit: provided always, that in cases of subtraction of church rates for an amount not exceeding five pounds where the party in contempt has suffered imprisonment for six months and upwards, the consent of the other parties to the suit shall not be necessary to enable the judge to discharge such party, so soon as the costs lawfully incurred by reason of the custody and contempt of such party (1) shall have been discharged, and the sum for which

Proviso. *

(1) Costs lawfully incurred by reason of the custody and contempt of such party:—Under such words, costs in the ecclesiastical court only are intended. Thus, in Baker v. Thorogood, (2 Curt. 632,) Dr. Lushington observed:—

“I am now, for the first time, to carry into effect a new act—totally different from any other—passed with a view of authorizing the release of a person in custody; and in consequence it becomes the duty of the court to be guided by the true meaning of the act.

“In order to ascertain the true construction of the statute, I think it necessary, in the first instance, to consider the state of the law prior to the passing of it, and then to see how far the law has been altered by the statute.

“The person committed in this case for contempt was sued in the ecclesiastical court, for church rate, a subject over which the court had undoubted jurisdiction. He refused to appear, or to submit to the judgment of the court; he was consequently pronounced in contempt, his contempt was signified, and he has been for a considerable time past in custody. If no such statute had passed, the course of proceeding would have been this: the court would have been called upon, at the instance of the party imprisoned for contempt, to allow his contempt to be purged, and that could only be done on the payment of the costs incurred in this court in consequence of his contempt, and on his taking the usual oath to submit to the lawful commands of his ordinary. Now, let us see whether, under these extraordinary circumstances, the court would have required anything more to be done on the part of Mr. Thorogood. Suppose application had been made, either for a writ of habeas corpus, or for the purpose of quashing the writ de contumace capiendo, to a court of common law, and that court had been of opinion, that the Consistorial court of London had properly exercised its jurisdiction, and it had refused the application; unquestionably, the other party must have incurred certain costs. Now, whatever those costs may have been, it is perfectly clear that, previous to the statute, I could have taken no cognizance of them at all; because the proceedings would have been before another jurisdiction, which was alone competent to decide whether a party was liable to the costs, and to cause the costs to be paid. I now consider the provisions of the present statute, and to what extent it has altered the antecedent law.

“I have observed that, prior to the passing of this statute, it was requisite for a party to submit himself to the jurisdiction of the court, and to take an oath of obedience. I apprehend that, unless under very peculiar he may have been cited into the ecclesiastical court shall have been paid into the registry of the said court, there to abide the result of the suit; and the party so discharged shall be released from all further observance of justice in the said suit.

"II. And be it enacted, that any such order may be in the form given in the schedule annexed to this act.

"III. And be it enacted, that this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of parliament."

circumstances, it would not have been competent to this court to allow a party to purge his contempt without taking the oath of obedience. This is a question which I have endeavoured to investigate to the utmost of my ability, and I do not find it has ever been done, unless under very peculiar circumstances. This having been the state of the law, what change has been made by the present act? It empowers the judicial committee of the Privy Council, or the judge of an ecclesiastical court, if it shall seem meet to the said committee or judge, to make an order for the discharge of a party out of custody; so that the act confers a discretionary power, which the court, under ordinary circumstances, had no right to exercise. It then provides, that no such order shall be made without the consent of the other party: that is, that the court can dispense with the oath of obedience if the other party consent. The next proviso, which is applicable to the present case, is, 'that, in cases of subtraction of church rate, for an amount not exceeding five pounds, where the party in contempt has suffered imprisonment for six months and upwards, the consent of the other party to the suit shall not be necessary to enable the judge to discharge such party, so soon as the costs lawfully incurred by reason of the custody and contempt of the party shall have been discharged, and the sum for which he may have been cited into the ecclesiastical court shall have been paid into the registry of the said court.' The effect of this proviso is to give the court a power, where these circumstances concur, namely, in a church-rate case, where the amount does not exceed five pounds, and the party in contempt has been imprisoned for six months; to discharge the contumacious person without the consent of the other party; but it requires that the costs lawfully incurred by reason of such custody and contempt shall be previously paid. The question, then, is narrowed to this: whether the costs taxed by the registrar are the costs intended by the statute; or whether I am bound to take into my consideration the costs alleged to have been incurred in the proceedings adverted to by the queen's advocate?

"I think it is obvious that, 'costs lawfully incurred by reason of the custody and contempt,' must mean, primarily at least, costs incurred in this court; because it is over such costs alone, that this court had jurisdiction before the passing of the act; and it is with respect to these costs alone that this court has the means of ascertaining their due and proper amount. It would be singular if this court had conferred upon it the extraordinary power of ascertaining, and not only ascertaining, but of deciding upon a party's liability to the costs in another court. I do not know, in this case, whether the court of Queen's Bench has condemned the party in the costs, or what is the amount of the costs, if it has so condemned him, and I do not possess the means of ascertaining either question. Again, it would be singular if this court should be invested with the power of keeping a person in prison till the costs in another court were paid, that other court being invested with power infinitely superior, and able to exercise it, for enforcing the payment of any costs it may condemn a party in. Therefore, it does appear to me, that, unless the words of the statute were so extremely strong as to leave the court in no doubt as to their meaning, I should act most in accordance with the ancient practice of these courts, if I were to confine their meaning to the costs incurred in this court. I do not think, indeed, that it is consistent with the object and intention of the legislature that these words should include the costs of an opposition to an application for a writ of habeas corpus, or for a rule to quash a writ of contumace capiendo.

"Then the single question is, what I ought to do in this case with reference to the discretionary power conferred upon me by this statute. The amount of the rate sued for is 9s. 2d. It is admitted that the party; not only refusing to pay but setting the authority of the court at defiance; has been in prison for a period twice the length of time mentioned in the act. In exercising the discretion conferred upon me by the statute, I must act according to its true meaning and intention, without reference to any opinion which may be entertained as to the propriety or impropriety of the conduct of the party in any part of the case. I think it is clear, from a perusal of the act, that under ordinary circumstances, considering that the amount of rate sued for in this case is considerably under 5*l*. and that the party has been imprisoned for much longer than six months, the court (unless under very peculiar circumstances) is bound by the words of the act, and will, in this case, exercise a just discretion in directing the party to be released from confinement.

"The course I shall adopt is this: on the amount of the costs, as taxed by the registrar, being paid into court, and also the charge incurred for the warrant, and also the amount of the rate sued for, as stated in the libel, to direct John Thorogood to be released from prison, without any further order."

"Whereas an act was passed in the session of parliament holden in the third and fourth years of the reign of his late majesty, intituled, 'An Act to alter and amend the Laws relating to the Temporalities of the Church in Ireland,' which act was amended by two acts passed respectively in the sessions of parliament holden in the fourth and fifth and sixth and seventh years of the same reign: and whereas it is expedient to amend the said acts in certain respects, be it therefore enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that in every case in which the appointment, presentation, or collation of a clerk to any benefice or parish shall have been suspended, pursuant to the said first-recited act, and a curate or other minister shall have been appointed to officiate within such benefice or parish, the consent of such curate or officiating minister shall, for all purposes for which the consent of the rector, vicar, or incumbent of such benefice or parish may by law be required, be as valid and effectual, during such suspension, as if such curate or officiating minister were the rector, vicar, or incumbent of such benefice or parish.

"II. And whereas the said ecclesiastical commissioners for Ireland did, pursuant to the provisions of the hereinbefore first-recited act, cause a valuation to be made of the revenues of the several dignities and benefices liable, under the provisions of the said act, to the payment of the tax, rate, or assessment in such act mentioned, and did, according to such valuation, compute and impose such tax, rate, or assessment, on the several dignities and benefices respectively liable thereto, but, by reason of the opposition to the payment of tithes in Ireland, it was in many cases found impossible to enforce payment of the same; and the said commissioners have, in the exercise of the discretion in that behalf vested in them by the said act, extended the time for the payment thereof: and whereas by an act passed in the session of parliament holden in the first and second years of the reign of her present majesty, intituled, 'An Act to abolish Compositions for Tithes in Ireland, and to substitute Rent-Charges in lieu thereof,' the right of all persons in and to all tithes and composition for tithes theretofore accrued, or at any time thereafter to accrue due in Ireland, wholly ceased and determined, with certain exceptions in the said act mentioned; and by the said act a certain fund was appropriated to the relief of the several persons who, if the said act had not been made, would have been entitled to compositions for tithes accrued due for certain years in the said act mentioned, and further provision was made for the payment to the parties theretofore entitled to certain tithes and composition for tithes vested in her majesty by the said act of such sums as should be paid or recovered by her majesty's attorney-general for Ireland on account thereof: and whereas it is reasonable that the parties whose right to the arrears of tithe or tithe composition due to them has so ceased and determined should be relieved from the payment of the said tax in respect of such portion of the revenues of their benefices or promotions as by the operation of the said act may have been lost to them, or shall not be hereafter paid to them, and that for the purpose of computing the amount of tax justly payable by them, the valuation and assessment of their respective dignities or benefices heretofore made by the said ecclesiastical commissioners shall be amended; be it therefore enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the said ecclesiastical commissioners, when and as they shall think necessary, to alter and amend the valuation heretofore made by them of the revenues or emoluments of all or any of such dignities or benefices, under the rank of bishoprics, as were or are now liable to the said tax, rate, or assessment, or any arrears thereof, for any of the years preceding the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight; and in altering or amending such valuation the said commissioners shall have regard to and include all or any such payments as may or shall be made to any dignitary or incumbent, pursuant to the provisions of the said recited act of the first and second years of her present majesty's reign; and they shall assess and compute the tax or arrears thereof to which every such dignity or benefice, under the rank of a bishopric, was or shall be deemed to be or have been liable for any year or portion of any year, preceding the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight, upon such altered or amended valuation, according to the several rates or scales specified in the schedule (A) annexed to the said hereinbefore first-recited act, in like manner as if such altered or amended valuation had been the valuation of each such dignity or benefice originally made, pursuant to the provisions of the said act; and all arrears of the said tax so assessed and computed, if any, now remaining unpaid, shall and may be recovered by all such ways and means as are in and by the said act provided for enforcing payment of the said tax, rate, or assessment: provided always, that it shall and may be lawful for the said ecclesiastical commissioners, if they shall so think fit, in any case to direct the payment of the whole or any portion of the arrears of the said tax, rate, or assessment, by instalments, of such amount, and to be paid at such times, and subject to such conditions for securing the payment thereof, as they shall deem reasonable, but so nevertheless that the whole shall be paid within five years next after the passing of this act; provided further, that in any case where it shall appear to the said commissioners that any party shall have paid on account of such tax any sum with which he would not have been justly chargeable under such amended valuation, or any sum greater than, under such amended valuation, he would have been justly chargeable with, the said commissioners shall repay and refund to such party the sum or overplus so paid.

collections made in such church or chapel, or from any other source or sources whatsoever, and how such income has been theretofore applied, and is in future intended to be applied; and that it shall and may be lawful for the said commissioners, having regard to the amount and application of such income, to pay or contribute such sum or sums as under or by virtue of the said recited acts, or any of them, they might or ought to have paid or contributed for or towards the providing of things necessary for the celebration of divine service in such church or chapel, as required and authorized by any rubric or canon in force in England or Ireland, or for or towards payment of the salaries for maintenance of the clerks or sextons of such church or chapel, or for or towards the rebuilding, enlarging, or repairing of the same, or, at their discretion, to withhold, in case of any such church or chapel, the payment of any sum or sums of money for or towards the several objects and purposes aforesaid, or any of them.

"IV. And whereas it was by the hereinbefore recited act passed in the sixth and seventh years of the reign of his late majesty, amongst other things, enacted, that upon any lands set apart for that purpose as in the said reciting act mentioned it should and might be lawful to and for any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, to erect and build a church or chapel, or to appropriate as a church or chapel any building already erected on such land, in which the liturgy and rites of the united church of England and Ireland as by law established was to be used and observed, who should first settle and assure lands, tenements, or hereditaments held in fee-simple or for lives with covenant for perpetual renewal thereof, or for a term of ninety-nine years, of which sixty years at the least should be then unexpired, free from incumbrances, and of the clear yearly value of fifty pounds at the least, or money in any of the government funds amounting at the least to one thousand two hundred and fifty pounds, as a provision or maintenance for a minister to officiate in such church or chapel, and his successors for ever, as a perpetual endowment of such church or chapel: and whereas it is expedient that a fund shall be provided for the repairs of every such church or chapel in like manner as is by law required in respect of churches and chapels built or appropriated under similar enactments in England; be it therefore enacted, that in addition to the endowment required to be made for the support or maintenance of the minister and his successors to officiate in any church or chapel built or appropriated under the provisions of the said recited act, it shall, from and after the passing of this act, be necessary also to provide a fund for the repair of the said church or chapel in manner following; (namely,) one sum equal in amount to three pounds upon every one hundred pounds of the original cost of erecting and fitting up or of purchasing such chapel or building, to be secured upon lands or money in the funds as aforesaid, and also a further sum to be reserved annually out of the pew rents of the said church or chapel, after the rate of three pounds for every one hundred pounds of the sum so to be provided as last aforesaid.

recited and in part repealed.

"V. And whereas it was by the hereinbefore recited act of the fourth and fifth years of the reign of his late majesty, among other things, enacted, that where there shall not be any vicar or curate in any parish which, or the tithes or any portions of the tithes and glebes whereof, may be appropriated or united to any archbishopric, bishopric, deanery, archdeaconry, dignity, prebend, or canonry, it shall and may be lawful for the lord lieutenant of Ireland and the privy council there, if they shall so think fit, by and with the consent and approbation of the archbishop, bishop, dean, archdeacon, dignitary, prebendary, or canon thereof, or whensoever such archbishopric, bishopric, deanery, archdeaconry, dignity, prebend, or canonry shall be void, to disappropriate, disunite, and divest such parish, and of tithes, portions of tithes, or glebes thereunto belonging, from and out of such archbishopric, bishopric, deanery, archdeaconry, dignity, prebend, or canonry, and, if they shall so think fit, to order and direct that such tithes or portions of tithes, or glebes, so disunited, shall from thenceforward be united and annexed to any neighbouring rectory, vicarage, or perpetual curacy, as in the said act after mentioned, or shall be and become for ever a separate benefice and parish: and whereas it is expedient to repeal part of the said recited enactment, and to make other provisions in lieu thereof; be it therefore enacted, that so much of the said recited enactment as empowers the said lord lieutenant and council to unite and annex any parish, tithes or portions of tithes, or glebes, so disunited, to any neighbouring rectory, vicarage, or perpetual curacy, shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

“VI. And be it enacted, that in lieu of uniting and annexing any parish, tithes or portions of tithes, or glebes, so disunited, to any neighbouring rectory, vicarage, or perpetual curacy, it shall be lawful for such lord lieutenant and council, if they shall not think fit to erect the same into a separate benefice or parish, to order and direct that such parish, tithes or portions of tithes, or glebes, so disunited, shall be transferred to the said ecclesiastical commissioners, and the right and interest in and to the same, and all arrears thereof, shall thereupon vest in the said commissioners, and be by them carried to the general fund under their administration, after making thereout such provision, if needed, for the due performance of the occasional duties of such parish or place, as the said commissioners may think fit: provided nevertheless, that it shall and may be lawful for the said commissioners, from and out of the monies hereafter accruing to the said fund by the means aforesaid, and in preference to any other purposes to which the said fund may be by law now primarily applicable, to appropriate such sum or sums as they may think fit, not exceeding one thousand pounds in any one year, to the like purposes and uses as the monies bequeathed by Dr. Hugh Boulter and Dr. Richard Robinson, formerly Archbishops of Armagh, and now vested in the said commissioners, are by law applicable.

“VII. And whereas the said last-recited act contains a further enactment, which it is expedient, with regard to the provisions hereinbefore made, shall also be repealed; be it therefore enacted, that the enactment of the said recited act of the third and fourth years of his late majesty's reign hereinafter following shall be and the same is hereby repealed; (that is to say,) so much of the said recited act as enacts, that in any case in which the said lord lieutenant and council shall have power and authority, under the provisions of the said recited act, or under the provisions of the said act of the fourth and fifth years of the same reign, and shall think fit to disappropriate, disunite, and divest any rectory, vicarage, tithes or portion of tithes, and glebes or part or parts thereof, from and out of any archbishopric, bishopric, deanery, archdeaconry, dignity, prebend, or canonry, it shall and may be lawful for such lord lieutenant and council, if they shall so think fit, to unite and annex to any adjoining or neighbouring rectory, vicarage, or perpetual curacy as aforesaid, such rectory, vicarage, tithes or glebes, or any part or parts or portions thereof respectively, so disappropriated, disunited, or divested as aforesaid, together with the actual cure of souls within such rectory or vicarage, or such part or parts thereof so united or annexed respectively, or within such place or places respectively, whereof the tithes or glebes shall be so united and annexed.

“VIII. And whereas it was by the hereinbefore recited act of the first and second years of the reign of her present majesty, among other things, provided, that in every case in which no applotment of a composition for tithes had been hitherto made, pursuant to the provisions of the several acts for establishing such compositions therein referred to, it should be lawful for any person or persons in any parish who would have been, in case such act had not been made, individually or collectively liable to the payment of more than one fourth part of the amount of the whole composition established in and for such parish, to apply for the making of such applotment to the lord lieutenant or the chief governor or governors of Ireland in council, and that such application should be made by memorial to be lodged with the clerk of the council before the first day of October then next, and notified by public advertisement, and otherwise, as in the said act mentioned: and whereas it is expedient to make further provision for the applotment of such compositions in parishes in which no such applotment has been made under the said acts or any of them: be it enacted, that in any case in which no applotment of the said composition for tithes shall have been hitherto made, it shall be lawful for any person or persons in any parish who would have been, in case the said act had not been made, entitled to the receipt of the composition established in and for such

And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for any person or persons, liable to the payment of any rent-charge in such parish under the said recited act, to apply by counter-memorial to the lord lieutenant in council to be heard in opposition to such memorial, such counter-memorial to be lodged with the clerk of the council within twenty days after such notice shall have been published as aforesaid, or within such further time as such lord lieutenant in council shall order; and it shall be lawful for the lord lieutenant in council to examine into the merits of any such memorial or counter-memorial, and for that purpose to receive such evidence on oath and otherwise as to him shall seem meet, and to make such order whether for dismissing such memorial, or for directing an applotment to be made or respecting the manner in which such applotment shall be made, or respecting the omission therefrom of any lands which may appear to be tithe free, or otherwise, as to the said lord lieutenant in council shall seem meet; and it shall be lawful for the said lord lieutenant and council, for the better informing them upon any matter relating to the subject of the prayer of such memorial or counter memorial, to direct any such matter to be inquired into before the judge or judges of assize for the county in which such parish shall be situate, with or without a jury, as the lord lieutenant and council shall order, and such judge or judges shall so inquire accordingly, and shall receive evidence on such inquiry, as in cases of trials by nisi prius, and shall certify the result of such inquiry to the lord lieutenant in council.

“X. And be it enacted, that in every such case it shall and may be lawful for the said lord lieutenant in council, if he shall so think fit, to appoint one or more skilful person or persons to make such applotment, who shall therein, (subject to any order or orders of the lord lieutenant in council made under this act,) have and exercise the like powers, privileges, and authorities, and observe, as far as may be, the like regulations, as are given and directed to be observed by the said act for establishing compositions of tithes; and the said lord lieutenant shall cause to be paid to the person or persons employed for the purposes aforesaid such remuneration as he shall think reasonable, and the expenses thereof shall be repaid by grand jury presentment on or off the parish in which such expenses shall have been incurred; and a certificate of the amount so expended in respect of each such parish shall be transmitted, under the hand of the paymaster of civil services in Ireland, to the treasurer of the county in which such parish may be situate, and such treasurer shall insert the sum specified in such certificate in his warrant for the collection of the money to be raised and levied off such parish by presentment of the grand jury at the assizes next succeeding, and such sum shall be applotted, (if need be by a separate applotment,) and raised and levied off the lands liable to rent-charge in such parish, in like manner, and by the like ways and means, as if such sum had been presented by the said grand jury at such assizes, to be levied off such lands, and shall be paid over by the said treasurer, when and as by him received, to such bank or person, and in such manner, as the commissioners of her majesty's Treasury, or any three or more of them, shall direct.

“XI. And be it enacted, that every such applotment made under the authority of this act shall be subject to such appeal, alteration, and amendment, and shall be as good, valid, and effectual as any applotment made under the authority of the said acts for establishing compositions for tithes in Ireland, or any of them: provided nevertheless, that it shall be lawful for the said lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors in council to fix and declare the time from which each such applotment to be made under the authority of this act shall take effect, or to which the same shall relate, and to make such orders and regulations in each such case, and from time to time to rescind or vary the same, as to him and them shall seem just and necessary; and all such orders and regulations shall be good, valid, and effectual, as if the same had been inserted in this act; and the enactments herein made in respect of the applotments to be made under the authority of this act shall be construed together with the said recited act of the first and second years of her majesty's reign, and as part thereof, to all intents and purposes.

"Whereas an act was passed in the seventh year of the reign of his late majesty, intituled, 'An Act for carrying into effect the Reports of the Commissioners appointed to consider the State of the Established Church in England and Wales, with reference to Ecclesiastical Duties and Revenues, so far as they relate to Episcopal Dioceses, Revenues, and Patronage,' constituting the ecclesiastical commissioners for England to be one body politic and corporate for the purposes set forth in the said act: and whereas the commissioners first mentioned in the said act, in their fourth report to his late majesty, bearing date the twenty-fourth day of June, in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, made certain recommendations touching cathedral and collegiate churches, and other things in the said report specified: and whereas it is expedient that the said recommendations should be adopted, with certain alterations; be it therefore enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from henceforth all the members of chapter, except the dean, in every cathedral and collegiate church in England, and in the cathedral churches of St. David and Llandaff, shall be styled canons; and the precentor of the cathedral church of St. David and the warden of the collegiate church of Manchester shall be respectively styled dean.

"II. And be it enacted, that, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, the number of canons in the several cathedral and collegiate churches of the new foundation, and in the cathedral churches of St. David and Llandaff, and in the queen's free chapel of St. George within the castle of Windsor, and of canons residentiary in the several cathedral churches of the old foundation in England, shall be the number respectively specified in the schedule hereto annexed.

"III. Six canonries

Canterbury.

"IV. And be it enacted, that in the chapter of the cathedral church of Canterbury six canonries shall be suspended in the following order; that is to say, the canonry firstly vacant shall be suspended; and the canonry now held by the Archdeacon of Canterbury and the canonry secondly vacant shall be subject to the provisions hereinafter contained respecting the endowment of archdeaconries by the

(2) Ecclesiastical Duties and Revenues.—From the summary of a parliamentary return, which has been recently issued, containing a list of benefices and churches augmented by the ecclesiastical commissioners for England, and made up to the 1st of May, 1844, it appears, that under schedule A. the commissioners had in 496 livings, made by unconditional grants, an annual augmentation amounting to 25,779*l.*, which was divided under four branches in the following manner: In places where the population was 2000 and upwards, the income was raised to 150*l.* in 261 livings, which amounted to 16,722*l.*; where the population was 1000 and upwards, the income of 96 livings was raised to 120*l.*, making 4374*l.*; where the population was 500 and upwards, 80 livings were augmented to 100*l.*, making 3253*l.*; and in instances where the population was below 500, in 59 livings the income was increased to 80*l.*, making a sum of 1430*l.* It further appears, that grants have been made by the commissioners to meet benefactions when the income was below 200*l.* in 48 livings. The commissioners have local claims upon tithes, &c., in 29 livings, and in 10 others the incumbents have claims for compensation for the loss of fees surrendered to new churches. The aggregate number of livings, after deducting 21 included in more than one schedule, which have been augmented, number 562, and the amount to 29,809*l.* It thus appears, that, under the provisions of the Cathedral Acts, 562 livings have already been augmented by the sum of 29,809*l.* per annum in perpetuity, and that sum is exclusive of money expended and promised to meet benefactions for building and purchasing houses of residence for incumbents whose annual incomes are below 200*l.*

And whereas, under the first-recited act, certain new archdeaconries therein named may, by the authority thereby provided, be created, and districts may be assigned thereto, and the limits of the existing archdeaconries and rural deaneries may be newly arranged; and whereas it is expedient to extend the power of creating new archdeaconries and rural deaneries; be it enacted, that in any case in which it shall appear, upon the representation of the bishop, to be proper to divide any archdeaconry or rural deanery on account of the magnitude thereof, or any other peculiar circumstance connected therewith, such archdeaconry or rural deanery may, by the authority hereinafter provided, be divided into two or more portions, and each of such portions may be constituted a separate archdeaconry or rural deanery, as the case may be, and a district may be assigned thereto; provided always, that no such division shall be made without the consent of the bishop under his hand and seal.

Bishops of London and Lincoln may appoint an archdeacon to the new canonry of St. Paul's and Lincoln.

“XXXIII. And be it enacted, that the Bishops of London and Lincoln respectively may forthwith and from time to time appoint one of the archdeacons of their respective dioceses to the new canonries hereby added to the respective chapters of the cathedral churches of Saint Paul in London and of Lincoln; and that every archdeacon so appointed to a canonry shall thereupon become and be a canon of the cathedral church of Saint Paul or Lincoln, and a member of the chapter of such church, to all intents and purposes, and possessed of and entitled to the like rights, privileges, dignities, and emoluments as are possessed by other canons in the same church, subject nevertheless to the provisions herein contained.

Provision for archdeaconries.

“XVI. Provided always, and be it enacted, that in any cathedral church in which by the suspension of canonries the number of canons shall be reduced to four, one of such suspended canonries may by the authority hereinafter provided, if it be deemed necessary for the purpose of endowing any archdeaconry or archdeaconries, be filled up, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained respecting the endowment of archdeaconries by the annexation of canonries thereto.

“XVII. And be it enacted, that in the chapters of the cathedral churches of Saint Paul in London and of Lincoln respectively there shall be a fourth canonry, and such canonry shall be in the patronage of the Bishops of London and Lincoln respectively, subject nevertheless to the limitation as to the exercise of such patronage hereinafter contained.

“XVIII.(1) And be it enacted, that in the collegiate church of Southwell the canonries now vacant, and all the other canonries except the canonry now held by the Archdeacon of Nottingham, as vacancies occur, shall be suspended.

“XIX. And be it enacted, that no appointment shall hereafter be made to any canonry in either of the cathedral churches of Saint David or Llandaff, excepting any canonry by the vacancy of which the canons shall be reduced below the number of two; and that all canonries vacant previously to such reduction shall be suspended.

“XX. And be it enacted, that a plan may from time to time be laid before the ecclesiastical commissioners for England by any of the said chapters of the several cathedral and collegiate churches, with the sanction of the visitors of the said churches respectively, for removing the suspension from and re-establishing any canonry or canonries which shall have been suspended by or under the provisions of this act, by assigning towards the re-endowment of any such canonry or canonries a portion of the divisible corporate revenues remaining to the said chapters respectively, after paying to the said ecclesiastical commissioners the profits and emoluments accruing to the said commissioners from the suspended canonry or canonries, so that the profits and emoluments of such suspended canonry or canonries be not diminished by the removal of such suspension; and also by accepting and assigning for the same purpose any further endowment in money, or in lands, tithes, or other hereditaments, such lands, tithes, or other hereditaments not exceeding in yearly value the sum of two hundred pounds for each canonry from which the suspension shall have been so removed; and also by annexing to any such canonry from which the suspension shall have been so removed any suitable benefice or other preferment in the patronage of the said chapters respectively, or of any other patron, with the consent of such patron, and where any bishop is patron, with consent of the archbishop; and any such plan may be carried into effect by the authority hereinafter provided, and such alterations may be made in the existing statutes and rules of the said chapters respectively, as the case may require, under the authority herein provided for making alterations in existing statutes.

“XXI. And be it enacted, that no new appointment shall be made to the deaneries of Wolverhampton, Middleham, Heytesbury, and Brecon respectively, but that the said deaneries shall, as to any which may be vacant at the passing of this act, immediately upon its so passing, and as to any other immediately upon the vacancy thereof, be suppressed.

“XXVII. And be it enacted, that no person shall hereafter be capable of receiving the appointment of dean, archdeacon, or canon until he shall have been six years complete in priest's orders, except in the case of a canonry annexed to any professorship, headship, or other office in any university.

“XXVIII. And be it enacted, that in every cathedral or collegiate chapter wherein there exists any statute or custom for assigning to the dean or to any canon any land, tithes, or other hereditament, in addition to his share of the corporate revenues, or for appropriating separately to the dean or any canon during his incumbency the proceeds of any land, tithes, or other hereditament, part of the corporate property of the chapter, every such statute and custom, or every such part thereof as relates to such assignment or appropriation, shall be repealed and annulled as to all deans and canons hereafter appointed: provided nevertheless, that any small portion of land situate within the limits and precincts of any cathedral or collegiate church, or in the vicinity of any residentiary house, may be reserved to such church, or permanently annexed to such residentiary house, by the authority hereinafter provided.

And be it enacted, that when any land or building shall have been or shall be given or acquired under the provisions of the said first-recited act or this act, or shall be held in trust for the purposes aforesaid, and it shall be deemed advisable to sell or exchange the same for any other more convenient or eligible site, it shall be lawful for the trustees in whom the legal estate in the said land or building shall be vested, by the direction or with the consent of the managers and directors of the said school, if any such there be, to sell or exchange the said land or building, or part thereof, for other land or building suitable to the purposes of their trust, and to receive on any exchange any sum of money by way of effecting an equality of exchange, and to apply the money arising from such sale or given on such exchange in the purchase of another site, or in the improvement of other premises used or to be used for the purposes of such trust; provided that where the land shall have been given by any ecclesiastical corporation sole, the consent of the bishop of the diocese shall be required to be given to such sale or exchange before the same shall take place: provided also, that where a portion of any parliamentary grant shall have been or shall be applied towards the erection of any school, no sale or exchange thereof shall take place without the consent of the secretary of state for the home department for the time being.

porting to be made in pursuance of the powers of the said first-recited act, to the minister or incumbent and the churchwardens or chapelwardens of certain parishes or places, as and for sites of schools or houses of residence for the schoolmasters; and doubts have been entertained whether such conveyances are valid and effectual for the purposes of conveying the fee-simple, in consequence of the said statute not containing any words of limitation to the successors of such persons; be it therefore enacted, that all conveyances whereby any land shall have been conveyed to the minister or incumbent and the churchwardens or chapelwardens of any parish or place for the time being, whether made to them as such minister or incumbent and churchwardens or chapelwardens, or to them and their successors, shall be deemed and taken to have been and shall be valid and effectual for the purpose of vesting the fee-simple, or such other estate as hath been proposed to be conveyed, in the persons who from time to time shall be the minister or incumbent and the churchwardens or chapelwardens of such place, such minister being the rector, vicar, or perpetual curate, whether endowed or not, of the said parish or place.

“XVII. And be it enacted, that no schoolmaster or schoolmistress to be appointed to any school erected upon land conveyed under the powers of this act shall be deemed to have acquired an interest for life by virtue of such appointment, but shall, in default of any specific engagement, hold his office at the discretion of the trustees of the said school.

said recited acts contained, it shall be lawful for the ecclesiastical commissioners for England, at any meeting duly convened according to the provisions thereof, to continue and adjourn such meeting from day to day for any such number of days as they shall deem necessary; and the proceedings of the said commissioners, and all acts, matters, and things done and executed by them, on each and every of such days of adjournment, shall be as valid and effectual to all intents and purposes as if the same had been done and executed on the first day of such meeting: provided always, that no proceeding which requires to be ratified and confirmed by the common seal of the corporation shall be finally concluded by the affixing of the said seal on any such day of adjournment, unless notice of the intention to propose such proceeding for final consideration and decision shall have been sent together with every notice issued for such first day of meeting.

“II. And for the removal of all doubts respecting the foundation of honorary canonries, be it declared and enacted, that honorary canonries are and shall be founded forthwith in the cathedral churches of Canterbury, Bristol, Carlisle, Chester, Durham, Ely, Gloucester, Norwich, Oxford, Peterborough, Ripon, Rochester, Winchester, and Worcester, and in the collegiate church of Manchester so soon as the same shall become a cathedral church, and in no other cathedral church; and that all the provisions of the secondly-recited act which purport to relate to honorary canonries shall apply to the honorary canonries so founded.

“III. And be it enacted, that the holding of an honorary canonry, or of any prebend, dignity, or office, not now in any manner endowed, or whereof the lands, tithes, or other hereditaments, endowments, or emoluments shall have been vested in the ecclesiastical commissioners for England, or which may hereafter be endowed to an amount not exceeding twenty pounds by the year, shall not be construed to prevent the holding therewith of more benefices than one; and that no such prebend, dignity, or office, which was vacant on the thirteenth day of August last, or became so at any time since, shall be deemed to have lapsed by reason of such vacancy, but hath remained and shall remain in the patronage of the archbishop or bishop of the diocese for the time being until a successor shall be collated thereto; and that every such prebend, dignity, or office, which shall hereafter become vacant, and every such honorary canonry, shall in like manner be and remain in the patronage of the archbishop or bishop of the diocese for the time being until a successor shall be collated thereto; any royal prerogative, statute, canon, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

And whereas it is by the thirdly-recited act provided, that nothing thereinbefore contained shall be construed to prevent any archdeacon from holding, together with his archdeaconry, two benefices, under the limitations in the said act mentioned with respect to distance, joint yearly value, and population, and one of which benefices shall be situate within the diocese of which his archdeaconry forms a part, or one cathedral preferment in any cathedral or collegiate church of the diocese of which his archdeaconry forms a part, and one benefice situate within such diocese: and whereas doubts are entertained whether the said provision includes benefices of peculiar or exempt jurisdiction, and it is expedient that such doubts should be removed; be it therefore enacted, that the said provision shall extend and apply to benefices locally situate within the diocese of which any such archdeaconry shall form a part, although the same may not be subject to the jurisdiction of the bishop of such diocese.

"XI. And be it enacted, that any canonry or portion of the income of a canonry or benefice annexed to any archdeaconry under the provisions of the secondly-recited act or this act may at any time, upon the representation of the bishop of the diocese, and by the authority in the said secondly-recited act provided, be disannexed from such archdeaconry on the vacancy thereof, and annexed to any other archdeaconry in the same diocese.

And be it enacted, that whenever it shall be made to appear to the ecclesiastical commissioners for England that it would be expedient to make an exchange of an advowson, or of any right of patronage, for any other advowson or right of patronage, with a view to proceedings being taken for the union of two or more benefices under the provisions of the said act passed in the second year of her present majesty's reign, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, with the consent of the patron or patrons of every such advowson or right of patronage, and also, in case any such advowson or right of patronage shall be vested in or belong

“XXIV. And be it declared and enacted, that all the provisions relating to the consent of patrons of benefices, contained in the thirdly-recited act passed in the second year of the reign of her present majesty, shall be construed to apply to the consent of patrons under the provisions of the secondly-recited act and of this act, as fully and effectually as if the same had been therein and herein repeated and enacted respecting the patrons of benefices affected by such secondly-recited act and this act.

“XXV. And be it enacted, subject to the provisions of the said secondly-recited act with respect to the interests of existing incumbents, that in the queen’s free chapel of Saint George within her castle of Windsor, so soon as a vacancy shall occur in the deanery, the share of the divisible corporate revenues from time to time payable to each canon appointed after the passing of the same act, and to the ecclesiastical commissioners for England in respect of each suspended canonry, shall be one fourteenth part of the whole of such revenues, and the remainder thereof shall be paid to the dean; and in the cathedral church of Lincoln, so soon as the chapter thereof shall entirely consist of a dean and canons appointed after the passing of the said secondly-recited act, the whole divisible corporate revenues shall from time to time be divided into six shares, and two of such shares shall be paid to the dean, and one of such shares shall be paid to each canon; and in the meantime such revenues may be so apportioned by the authority in the said secondly-recited act provided as to afford just shares thereof to the new members of chapter.

And be it declared and enacted, that the provisions of the secondly-recited act respecting the augmentations of benefices under the provisions of an act passed in the second year of the reign of his late majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, ‘An Act to extend the Provisions of an Act passed in the twenty-ninth year of the Reign of His Majesty King Charles the Second, intituled, “An Act for confirming and perpetuating Augmentations made by Ecclesiastical Persons to small Vicarages and Curacies,” and for other Purposes,’ therein recited, do and shall extend and apply to every dean, canon, prebendary, or other dignitary or officer whose revenues are or may be affected by any of the provisions of the said two first-recited acts or either of them, or of this act; and if for the purpose of more fully carrying into effect the provisions of the said act relative to augmenta-

26 Geo. 3, c. 84.

"Whereas in and by an act passed in the twenty-sixth year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Third, intituled, 'An Act to empower the Arch-

(1) "In the year 1841, the appointment of a bishop for Jerusalem was proposed by his majesty the King of Prussia, by a special mission to the Queen of England, and a particular communication to the Archbishop of Canterbury. His majesty had in view the conversion of the Jews, and also the spiritual care of such of his own subjects in Palestine, who might wish to join themselves to the church so formed in Jerusalem. His majesty undertook to make at once the munificent donation of fifteen thousand pounds towards that object, the annual interest of which, amounting to six hundred pounds, is to be paid yearly in advance, till the capital sum, (together with that which is to be raised by subscription for the purpose of completing the bishop's annual income of twelve hundred pounds,) can be advantageously invested in land situate in Palestine.

"The Bishop of the United Church of England and Ireland at Jerusalem is to be nominated alternately by the crowns of England and Prussia, the archbishop having the absolute right of veto with respect to those nominated by the Prussian crown.

"The bishop will be subject to the Archbishop of Canterbury as his metropolitan, until the local circumstances of his bishopric shall be such as to make it expedient, in the opinion of the bishops of that united church, to establish some other relation.

"His spiritual jurisdiction will extend over the English clergy and congregations, and over those who may join his church, and place themselves under his episcopal authority in Palestine, and, for the present, in the rest of Syria, in Chaldaea, Egypt, and Abyssinia; such jurisdiction being exercised, as nearly as may be, according to the laws, canons, and customs of the church of England; the bishop having power to frame, with the consent of the metropolitan, particular rules and orders for the peculiar wants of his people.

"A college is to be established at Jerusalem, under the bishop, whose chaplain will be its first principal. Its primary object will be the education of Jewish converts; but the bishop will be authorized to receive into it Druses and other Gentile converts; and if the funds of the college should be sufficient, oriental Christians may be admitted; but clerical members of the orthodox Greek church will be received into the college, only with the express consent of their spiritual superiors and for a subsidiary purpose. The religious instruction given in the college will be in strict conformity with the doctrines of the united church of England and Ireland, and under the superintendence and direction of the bishop.

"Congregations, consisting of protestants of the German tongue, residing within the limits of the bishop's jurisdiction, and willing to submit to it, will be under the care of German clergymen ordained by him for that purpose, who will officiate in the German language, according to the forms of their national liturgy, compiled from the ancient liturgies, agreeing in all points of doctrine with the liturgy of the English church, and sanctioned by the bishop, with consent of the metropolitan, for the special use of those congregations; such liturgy to be used in the German language only. Germans intended for the charge of such congregations are to be ordained according to the ritual of the English church, and to sign the articles of that church: and in order that they may not be disqualified by the laws of Germany from officiating to German congregations, they are, before ordination, to exhibit to the bishop a certificate of their having subscribed, before some competent authority, the Confession of Augsburg.

"The rite of confirmation will be administered by the bishop to the catechumens of the German congregations, according to the form used in the English church." 1 Burn's E. L. by Phillimore, 415 ccc c.

of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. &c. &c. To the most reverend Father in God, William, by Divine Providence Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, primate of all England and metropolitan, greeting. Whereas, by an act passed in the fifth of our reign, intituled, 'An Act to amend an Act made in the twenty-sixth year of the Reign of His Majesty King George the Third, intituled, "An Act to empower the Archbishop of Canterbury or the Archbishop of York for the time being to consecrate to the Office of a Bishop Persons being Subjects or Citizens of Countries out of His Majesty's Dominions,"' it was, amongst other things, enacted, that it should and might be lawful for the Archbishop of Canterbury or the Archbishop of York for the time being, together with such other bishops as they should call to their assistance, to consecrate British subjects, or the subjects or citizens of any foreign kingdom or state, to be bishops in any foreign country, whether such foreign subjects or citizens be or be not subjects or citizens of the country in which they are to act, and without the queen's licence for their election, or the royal mandate under the great seal for their confirmation and consecration, and without requiring such of them as may be subjects or citizens of any foreign kingdom or state to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy and the oath of due obedience to the archbishop for the time being.

"And whereas it is by the said act further enacted, that such bishop or bishops so consecrated may exercise, within such limits as may from time to time be assigned for that purpose in such foreign countries by us, spiritual jurisdiction over the ministers of British congregations of the united church of England and Ireland, and over such other protestant congregations as may be desirous of placing themselves under his or their authority.

"And whereas it is by the said act provided, that no person should be consecrated a bishop in the manner therein provided until the Archbishop of Canterbury or the Archbishop of York for the time being should have first applied for and should have obtained our licence, by warrant under the royal signet and sign manual, authorizing and empowering him to perform such consecration, and expressing the name of the person so to be consecrated, nor until the said archbishop has been fully ascertained of the sufficiency of such person in good learning, of the soundness of his faith, and of the purity of his manners.

"And whereas you, the said William, Archbishop of Canterbury, have humbly applied to us for our licence, by warrant under our royal signet and sign manual, authorizing and empowering you to consecrate the Reverend Michael Solomon Alexander (clerk), a British subject, to be bishop of the united church of England and Ireland in Jerusalem, you having certified to us that you had fully ascertained the sufficiency of the said Michael Solomon Alexander in good learning, the soundness of his faith, and the purity of his manners, and praying that we would be graciously pleased to assign Syria, Chaldea, Egypt, and Abyssinia, as the limit within which the said Michael Solomon Alexander might exercise spiritual jurisdiction over the ministers of British congregations of the united church of England and Ireland, and over such other protestant congregations as may be desirous of placing themselves under his authority, subject to such alterations in respect to the limits of the jurisdiction so to be exercised as may hereafter be made by our authority.

"Now it is our royal will and pleasure, and we do, by this our licence under our royal signet and sign manual, authorize and empower you, the said archbishop, to consecrate the said Michael Solomon Alexander to be bishop of the united church of England and Ireland in Jerusalem. And we are graciously pleased to assign Syria, Chaldea, Egypt, and Abyssinia, as the limit within which the said Michael Solomon Alexander may exercise spiritual jurisdiction pursuant to the said act, subject nevertheless to such alterations in the said limit as we from time to time may be pleased to assign.

“II. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for her majesty, by any such letters patent as aforesaid, from time to time to make any such new apportionment and appropriation as to her majesty shall seem fit, among such new bishops and archdeacons, of the sums of money which by virtue of the said recited acts are payable out of the growing produce of the consolidated fund as the salaries of the bishops and archdeacons therein mentioned; and that it shall be lawful for her majesty, in manner aforesaid, to apportion and appropriate so much of the total amount of such sums of money as to her majesty shall seem fit for the maintenance of such new bishops as aforesaid, and so much thereof as to her majesty shall seem fit to the maintenance of such new archdeacons as aforesaid, without reference to, and without the observance of, the proportions in which the said sums of money are by the said recited acts apportioned for the maintenance of bishops and archdeacons respectively: provided that nothing herein contained shall authorize any diminution, during the life and incumbency of any bishop or archdeacon, of any salary to which he is or shall be by law entitled.

“III. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for her majesty, by any such letters patent as aforesaid, from time to time to assign to the respective bishops of such future dioceses as aforesaid the power of distributing among the ministers, catechists, and schoolmasters, of their respective dioceses, with the approbation of the commissioners of her majesty's Treasury, or of one of her majesty's principal secretaries of state, the sum of six thousand three hundred pounds per annum in the said recited act mentioned, in such proportion as her majesty shall see fit to apportion that sum between the said future dioceses: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall authorize any diminution, during the life and incumbency of any minister, catechist, or schoolmaster, of any salary to which he is or shall be by law entitled.

“V. And whereas by the said first-recited act his said late majesty, his heirs and successors, were authorized to give and grant to any person who should execute the office of bishop of either of the dioceses therein mentioned, and who should resign the same respectively, certain annuities or pensions; and it is expedient that, subject to the exception hereinafter contained, the said provision should be repealed; be it therefore enacted, that so much of the said recited act of the sixth year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Fourth as empowered his said late majesty, his heirs and successors, to grant annuities or pensions on the resignation of the dioceses therein mentioned shall be and the same is hereby repealed, save and except only so far as respects the respective bishops of the said dioceses of Jamaica and Barbadoes who had been appointed to the same respectively before the making of this present act.

"II. Provided always, and be it enacted, that in any scheme which shall be laid before her majesty in council by the ecclesiastical commissioners for England under this act, recommending any arrangement for taking down or selling any episcopal residence, or changing the site thereof, the said commissioners shall set forth particularly the grounds and reasons upon which they deem it expedient to offer such recommendation.

"III. And be it enacted, that an act passed in the session of parliament held in the second and third years of her majesty's reign, intituled, 'An Act to enable Archbishops and Bishops to raise Money on Mortgage of their Sees, for the purpose of building and otherwise providing fit Houses for their Residence,' shall be repealed; provided that nothing herein contained shall affect any subsisting mortgage made under the provisions thereof, but that every such mortgage, and all proceedings completed and in progress in respect thereof, shall be as valid and effectual, and all the parties to such mortgage or to any such proceeding shall continue subject to the same conditions and provisions as if the said act had not been repealed.

"IV. And be it enacted, that in case such a deficiency shall have been or would be created in the average annual income of any bishop appointed after the passing of the said first-recited act, by the effecting of any mortgage or other arrangement under either of the said acts or this act, as to reduce it below the average annual income of such bishop named in the first-recited act, or in any order of her majesty in council issued under the provisions thereof, it shall be lawful, by the authority aforesaid, out of any monies from time to time standing to the credit and account of the ecclesiastical commissioners for England, being part of payments from the larger sees respectively towards the augmentation of the incomes of the bishops of the smaller sees, if it shall be deemed fit, and if such monies, after duly considering all the claims thereon, shall appear to be sufficient for such purpose, to make any arrangement for supplying or preventing such deficiency or any part thereof which by the like authority shall be deemed expedient.

"V. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the dean and chapter, or for the dean, or for any canon of any cathedral church, under the authority aforesaid, to purchase any episcopal house of residence sold under the provisions of this act, or the site of any such house, or any other house or site, being contiguous or near to such cathedral church, or any part of such house or site, and to add to, alter, or improve any such house, or to take down the same, and to build another house or more houses than one upon the site thereof, or to apply the site of any such house, or any part thereof, by and with the authority aforesaid, to the improvement of the cathedral or the precincts thereof; and that so much of an act passed in the session of parliament held in the third and fourth years of her majesty's reign, intituled 'An Act to carry into effect, with certain Modifications, the Fourth Report of the Commissioners of Ecclesiastical Duties and Revenues,' as relates to the raising of monies by any dean or canon for the purpose of building, enlarging, or otherwise improving the residence house of his deanery or canonry, shall be extended so as to make lawful the raising of monies, in the manner and with the authority therein provided, by any dean and chapter, dean or canon, for any purpose of this act.

"VI. And be it enacted, that any house so purchased by the dean and chapter, dean or canon of any cathedral church, or any house erected upon any site so purchased, may by the authority aforesaid, and with the consent of the dean and chapter, be made the deanery, or the house of residence for any canon of such church; and the house theretofore occupied as the deanery, or any house no longer required as the house of residence of any canon, may be so applied or disposed of as may by the same authority and with the like consent be determined on.

"VII. And be it declared and enacted, that the provisions of an act passed in the session of parliament held in the fourth and fifth years of her majesty's reign, intituled, 'An Act to explain and amend two several Acts relating to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England,' respecting the disposal of houses no longer required by any canon, do and shall apply to all such houses, whether there may have been any exchange of such houses or not.

“VIII. And be it declared and enacted, that the provisions of the thirdly-recited act, relating to the sale and application of any sum of money invested in trust for any ecclesiastical body corporate, do and shall include and apply to all monies and securities for money, and to all stock in the government funds or elsewhere, standing in the name of the accountant-general of the court of Chancery, or in the name or names of any other public officer, or of any individual or individuals, for or to the credit or for the benefit of or in trust for any bishop, dean and chapter, dean or canon, whether for the purpose of being laid out in land or otherwise; and that the same provisions, and also the provisions of the same act relating to the sale, transfer, or exchange of any lands or other hereditaments belonging to any bishop or chapter, shall extend and may be applied to any of the purposes of this act.

And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful, by the authority aforesaid, to direct that any house of residence purchased, built, rebuilt, added to, altered, or improved under the provisions of the said recited acts or either of them, or of this act, shall be insured and kept insured by the bishop, dean, or canon for the time being in the occupation thereof, at his own personal charge and expense, in such public office or offices of assurance from loss or damage by fire, and in such sum or sums, as by the like authority may be deemed fit, and such house shall be insured and kept insured accordingly; and that the receipt for every premium payable for any such insurance shall be delivered to the said commissioners within fourteen days after such premium shall become due; and that in case of loss or damage by fire to any such house so insured, it shall be lawful, by the like authority, to direct in what manner the money received under any such insurance shall be deposited, in trust to be applied towards the rebuilding or repairing and the reinstating of such house, or of any such part thereof as may have so suffered loss or damage, and also to direct in what manner the same money, and the interest and accumulations thereof, if any, shall be applied to such last-mentioned purposes.

"II. And be it enacted, that the authority given by this act shall not render valid any lease to be granted in the manner hereinbefore mentioned, unless the parsonage house or other the house of residence of or belonging to the benefice, and all offices, outbuildings, yards, gardens, orchards, and plantations to such parsonage house or other house of residence adjoining and appurtenant, and which may be necessary or convenient for actual occupation with such parsonage house or other house of residence, and also so much glebe land or other land of or belonging to the benefice, and situated the most conveniently for actual occupation by the incumbent, as, together with the site of such parsonage house or other house of residence, offices, and outbuildings, and with such yards, gardens, orchards, and plantations as aforesaid, shall amount to ten acres at least, if there shall be ten or more acres of such land situated within five miles from the parsonage or other the house of residence, or if there shall be less than ten acres so situated, then the whole of such land shall be reserved out of or not be comprised in such lease, and not be comprised in any subsisting lease for the time being which shall have been previously granted under the authority of this act: provided always, that in any case where the lands comprised in any lease granted under the authority of this act shall be situate five miles or upwards from the parsonage house or other the house of residence, or (in case there shall be no parsonage house or other house of

“III. And be it enacted, that whenever any lease is intended to be granted under the authority of this act, a competent land surveyor shall be appointed by the bishop of the diocese and the patron and incumbent of the benefice, by some writing under their respective hands; and such surveyor shall make a map or plan under an actual survey of the lands proposed or intended to be leased, and of the other lands of or belonging to the benefice, or of such part or parts of the said other lands as will sufficiently show to the bishop of the diocese and the patron of the benefice the relative positions or local situations and quantities of the lands proposed or intended to be leased, and of the lands (if any) intended to be reserved, and as will enable them to form an accurate judgment of the situation and convenience for actual occupation of the lands intended to be reserved; and such surveyor shall certify that the lands intended to be leased, and such buildings and other hereditaments (if any) as are intended to be leased therewith, are proper to be leased to a tenant under the provisions of this act, and (in any case where the provision hereinbefore contained respecting the reservation of a stipulated number of acres may be applicable) that the lands which are intended to remain unlet are such part of the glebe land or other land of or belonging to the benefice as is situated the most conveniently for actual occupation by the incumbent thereof; and such surveyor shall also make a valuation on actual survey of the lands and hereditaments proposed or intended to be leased, and shall report what is the best yearly rent which ought to be reserved upon a lease of such lands and hereditaments under the circumstances under which such lease is proposed or intended to be granted, and shall state the course of husbandry or management of such lands and hereditaments which ought in the opinion of such surveyor to be adopted by the tenant thereof; and in any case where it is proposed that the lease shall contain special covenants on the part of the lessee for the drainage or subdividing, or embanking or warping, of all or any of the lands to be comprised in the lease, or for the erection of any new or additional farmhouses, barns, or outhouses, or other farm buildings, or for putting in repair any houses, edifices, or buildings to be comprised in the lease, or for making any substantial improvement in the premises, such surveyor shall certify that in his opinion the covenants for those purposes are proper covenants to be entered into by the lessee under the circumstances of the case, and he shall state the amount by which the yearly rent to be reserved by the proposed lease ought in his judgment to be diminished in respect or on account of the lessee entering into such covenants; and in any case where it is proposed that the lessee shall be entitled to have or take from off the demised premises brick earth, stones, lime, or other materials, or rough timber, for any of the purposes hereinbefore mentioned, he shall also certify that in his opinion covenants on the part of the lessor for those purposes are proper to be entered into, and that he has taken the matter into his consideration in estimating the amount of rent to be reserved by the proposed lease; and such surveyor shall in all cases also report upon and state such other matters or things (if any) connected with such intended lease, or the lands and hereditaments proposed or intended to be therein comprised, as he shall, by such bishop, patron, and incumbent, or any of them, be directed to report upon; and the map or plan, certificate, valuation, and report of such surveyor shall be respectively signed by such surveyor, and verified by his declaration to be made before any justice of the peace, and shall, immediately upon the completion thereof, respectively be delivered to the bishop of the diocese: provided always, that in all cases in which there shall be in the possession of the bishop of the diocese, or of the patron or incumbent of any benefice, or of the parish officers of the parish in which such benefice may be comprised, any map or plan made under an actual survey of the parish, or of such part thereof as shall include the lands proposed or intended to be demised, a copy of or an extract from such map or plan may be substituted for the map or plan hereinbefore directed to be made by any such surveyor as aforesaid.

And be it enacted, that the receipt in writing of the incumbent by whom any lease shall be granted under the authority of this act, acknowledging that he has received the counterpart, or an attested copy in all cases where there shall be only one part, of such lease, and signed by such incumbent, and endorsed on the lease, shall be conclusive evidence that the counterpart or lease (as the case may be) has been duly executed by the lessee, and also in all cases where there shall be only one part of such lease that the attested copy is a true and faithful transcript of the original lease; and the execution by the bishop and patron, whose consents are hereby made requisite, of any lease to be granted under the authority of this act, shall be conclusive evidence that the lease does not comprise any lands which ought not to be leased under the provisions of this act, and that a proper portion of the glebe land remains unleased, and that the rent reserved by such lease is the best and most improved rent that could be reasonably gotten for the lands and hereditaments comprised therein at the time of granting such lease, and that all the covenants contained in such lease are proper covenants.

"V. And be it enacted, that no surrender of any lease which shall have been made under the authority of this act shall be valid to any purpose whatsoever unless the bishop of the diocese and the patron and incumbent of the benefice to which the lands or hereditaments comprised in such lease shall belong shall respectively be made parties to and execute the deed or instrument by which such surrender shall be made; and every such surrender shall have operation from the time only when such deed or instrument as aforesaid shall have been executed by all the persons whose execution thereof is hereinbefore required.

"VI. And whereas there are within divers dioceses certain exempt jurisdictions called peculiars, belonging to the archbishops and bishops of other dioceses, and it is expedient that all the powers, authorities, and duties by this act given to or imposed upon the bishop of the diocese should, as to such peculiars, be given to and imposed upon the archbishop or bishop to whom the same respectively belong; be it therefore enacted, that all the powers, authorities, and duties by this act given to or imposed upon the bishop of any diocese shall, with respect to the aforesaid peculiars locally situated within such diocese, be exercised and performed by the archbishop or bishop to whom such peculiars shall respectively belong, and not by the bishop within whose diocese such peculiar shall be locally situated, but that with respect to all peculiars belonging to any other person than archbishops or bishops such powers, authorities, and duties shall be exercised and performed by the bishop of the diocese within which such peculiars shall be locally situated.

"VII. And be it enacted, that whenever the consent or concurrence of the patron of any benefice, or of the lord for the time being of any manor, is hereby required, and the patron of such benefice, or the lord for the time being of such manor, (as the case may be,) shall happen to be a minor, idiot, lunatic, or feme covert, or beyond seas, it shall be lawful for the guardian, committee, husband, or attorney (as the case may be) of such patron or lord, (but in the case of a feme covert not being a minor, idiot, or lunatic, or beyond seas, with her consent in writing,) to execute the instrument by which such consent or concurrence is to be testified, in testimony of the consent or concurrence of such patron or lord; and such execution shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed and taken to be an execution by the patron of the benefice or by the lord of the manor (as the case may be).

"VIII. And be it enacted, that in any case in which the consent or concurrence of the patron of any benefice is hereby required, and the patronage of such benefice shall be in the crown, the consent or concurrence of the crown shall be testified in the manner hereinafter mentioned; (that is to say,) if such benefice shall be above the yearly value of twenty pounds in the King's Books, the instrument by which such consent or concurrence shall be testified shall be executed by the lord high treasurer or first lord commissioner of the Treasury for the time being; and if such benefice shall not exceed the yearly value of twenty pounds in the King's Books, such instrument shall be executed by the lord high chancellor, or lord keeper or lords commissioners of the great seal for the time being; and if such benefice shall be within the patronage of the crown in right of the duchy of Lancaster, such instrument shall be executed by the chancellor of the said duchy for the time being; and the execution of such instrument by such person or persons shall be deemed and taken, for the purposes of this act, to be an execution by the patron of the benefice.

“IX. And be it enacted, that in any case in which the consent or concurrence of the patron of any benefice is hereby required, and the right of patronage of such benefice shall be part of the possessions of the duchy of Cornwall, the consent or concurrence of the patron of such benefice to the exercise of such power shall be testified in the manner hereinafter mentioned; (that is to say,) the instrument by which such consent or concurrence is to be testified shall, whenever there shall be a Duke of Cornwall, whether he be of full age or otherwise, be under his great or privy seal, or if there be no Duke of Cornwall, and such benefice shall be in the patronage of the crown in right of the duchy of Cornwall, such instrument shall be executed by the person or persons who is or are authorized to testify the consent or concurrence of the crown; and such instrument, being so sealed or executed, shall be deemed and taken, for the purposes of this act, to be an execution by the patron of the benefice.

Provision where the patronage is attached to the duchy of Cornwall.

“X. And be it enacted, that in any case in which the consent or concurrence of the patron of any benefice or of the lord of any manor is hereby required, and the patronage of such benefice, or (as the case may be) the lordship of such manor, shall belong to any dean and chapter, or collegiate or other corporate body having a common seal, the consent or concurrence of such dean and chapter, or collegiate or other corporate body, shall be testified by the sealing of the instrument by which such consent or concurrence is to be testified with the common seal of such dean and chapter, collegiate or other corporate body.

Corporate bodies may act by their common seal.

“XI. And be it enacted, that the person or persons, (if not more than two,) or the majority of the persons, (if more than two,) or the corporation, who or which would for the time being be entitled to the turn or right of presentation to any benefice if the same were then vacant, shall, for the purposes of this act, be considered to be the patron thereof; provided nevertheless, that in the case of the patronage being exercised alternately by different patrons, the person or persons, (if not more than two,) or the majority of the persons, (if more than two,) or the corporation, who or which would for the time being be entitled to the second turn or right of presentation to any benefice, if the same were then vacant, shall, for the purposes of this act, jointly with the person or persons or corporation entitled to the first turn or right of presentation, be considered to be the patron thereof.

Person who for the time being would be entitled to present shall be considered the patron.

“XII. And be it enacted, that in all cases in which any person shall sustain any more than one of the aforesaid characters of bishop of the diocese, patron, lord of the manor, and incumbent, in respect of any benefice to which the provisions of this act extend, every such person shall or may at any time act in both or all of the characters which he shall so sustain as aforesaid, and execute and do all and every or any of such deeds and acts as are hereby authorized to be executed and done, as effectually as different persons, each sustaining one of those characters, could execute and do the same.

Provision where any person shall sustain more than one of the characters of bishop, patron, and incumbent.

“XIII. And be it enacted, that whenever any lands or hereditaments proposed to be leased under the provisions of this act are or shall be vested in any trustee or trustees, in trust for or for the benefit of any incumbent hereby empowered to grant leases as aforesaid, in such a manner as that the net income or three fourth parts at the least of the net income of such lands and hereditaments is, are, or shall be payable for the exclusive benefit of such incumbent, all the powers of this act which, in case such lands and hereditaments had been legally vested in such incumbent for the sole and exclusive benefit of such incumbent, might have been exercised by such incumbent in relation to or affecting the same lands and hereditaments, shall or may be exercised by such incumbent in the same or the like manner as the same might have been exercised by such incumbent in case the same lands and hereditaments were legally vested in such incumbent as aforesaid; but in order to give legal effect to any lease to be executed in relation to any such lands

Incumbent's part of all instruments, and all maps, &c. shall be deposited in the bishop's registry, except as to peculiars belonging to bishops.

“XIV. And be it enacted, that the part of every lease granted under this act, which shall belong to any incumbent, or, in case there shall not be more than one part of any such lease, an attested copy thereof, and every surrender to be made under this act, together with the writing by which a surveyor shall have been appointed as aforesaid, and the map or plan, or copy of or extract from a map or plan, (as the case may be,) certificate, valuation, and report hereinbefore directed to be made before the granting of such lease, shall, within six calendar months next after the date of such lease, be deposited in the office of one of the registrars of the diocese wherein such benefice shall be locally situated, to be perpetually kept and preserved therein, except where the benefice shall be under the peculiar jurisdiction of any archbishop or bishop, in which case the several documents before mentioned shall be deposited in the office of the registrar of the peculiar jurisdiction to which such benefice shall be subject; and such registrars respectively, or their respective deputies, shall, upon any such deposit being so made, sign and give unto the incumbent a certificate of such deposit; and such lease or attested copy and other documents so to be deposited shall be produced, at all proper and usual hours, at such registry, to the incumbent of the benefice for the time being, or to the patron of such benefice for the time being, or to any person on their or either of their behalf, applying to inspect the same; and an office copy thereof, respectively certified under the hand of the registrar or his deputy, (and which office copy, so certified, the registrar or his deputy shall in all cases, upon application in that behalf, give to the incumbent for the time being of such benefice,) shall in any action against the lessee, and in all other cases, be admitted and allowed in all courts whatsoever as legal evidence of the contents of such lease, or of any such other document, and of the due execution of the counterpart of such lease by the lessee, if there shall be any counterpart, and of the due execution of the lease and of every such other document by the parties who on the face of such office copy shall appear to have executed the same; and every such registrar shall be entitled to the sum of five shillings, and no more, for so depositing as aforesaid the documents hereinbefore directed to be deposited, and for certifying the deposit thereof, and the sum of one shilling, and no more, for each search and inspection, and the sum of sixpence, and no more, over and besides the stamp duty (if any) for each folio of seventy-two words of each office copy so certified as aforesaid.

"Whereas it is expedient to alter and amend various statutes now in force in Ireland relative to certain offences by the said statutes now punishable with death, and to assimilate the law in Ireland as to the punishment of death in certain cases to the law in England: and whereas by an act passed in the twelfth year of the reign of King George the First, intituled, 'An Act to prevent Marriages by degraded Clergymen and Popish Priests, and for preventing Marriages consummated from being avoided by Pre-Contracts, and for the more effectual Punishment of Bigamy,' it was amongst other things enacted, that if any person pretending to be a popish priest, or any degraded clergyman, or any layman pretending to be a clergyman of the church of Ireland as by law established, should, after the twenty-fifth day of April in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and twenty-six, celebrate or take upon him to celebrate any marriage between two protestants or reputed protestants, or between a protestant or reputed protestant and a papist, such degraded clergyman, and layman pretending to be a clergyman, should be and was thereby declared to be guilty of felony, and should suffer death as a felon, without benefit of clergy: and whereas it is expedient that none of the said offences should be henceforth punishable with death: be it therefore enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that if any person shall, after the commencement of this act, be convicted of any of the offences hereinbefore mentioned, such person shall not suffer death, or have sentence of death awarded against him or her for the same, but shall be liable to be transported beyond the seas for seven years: provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall alter or in anywise affect the provisions of an act passed in the third and fourth years of the reign of his late majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, 'An Act to repeal certain penal Enactments made in the Parliament of Ireland against Roman Catholic Clergymen for celebrating Marriages contrary to the Provisions of certain Acts made in the Parliament of Ireland.'

And whereas it will be beneficial to both titheowners and landowners if the tithe commissioners are empowered to define the glebe lands in those cases in which the quantity of glebe is known, but cannot be identified, and also to exchange the glebe lands or part thereof for other land; be it enacted, that for the purpose of defining and settling the glebe lands of any benefice, on the application of the spiritual person to whom the same belongs in right of such benefice, and with the consent of the landowner or landowners having or claiming title to the land so defined as glebe, and being in possession thereof, the tithe commissioners shall, during the continuance of the commission, as well before as after the completion of any commutation, have the same powers which they have for ascertaining, drawing, and defining the boundaries of the lands of any landowners on their application; and also upon the like application of any spiritual person the said commissioners shall have power to exchange the glebe lands, or any part thereof, for other land within the same or any adjoining parish, or otherwise conveniently situated, with the consent of the ordinary and patron of the benefice and of the landowner or landowners having or claiming title to the land so to be given in exchange for the glebe lands, and being in actual possession thereof as aforesaid, such consent to be testified as their consent under the first-recited act is testified to anything for which their consent is therein required; and in every such case the tithe commissioners shall make an award in like manner as awards are made under the first-recited act, setting forth the contents, description, and boundary of the glebe lands as finally settled by them, and of the lands awarded to the several parties to whom any lands theretofore part or reputed part of the glebe lands are to be awarded; and every such award shall have all the incidents of an agreement confirmed by the said commissioners for giving land instead of tithes, and in every case of exchange shall operate as a conveyance of the lands theretofore part or reputed part of the glebe lands to the several persons to whom the same shall be awarded, and to their heirs and successors, executors and administrators, as the case may be; and such lands shall thereupon be holden by the same tenure, and upon the like uses and trusts, and subject to the like incidents, as the land awarded as glebe in exchange for the same was formerly holden; and the expense of so defining, exchanging, and settling any glebe lands shall be borne in such manner as the tithe commissioners shall think just.

“VII. And be it enacted, that where any agreement shall have been made before the passing of the first-recited act for giving land or money, or both, instead of tithes or glebe or commonable or other rights or easements, which is not of legal validity, and such lands or money, or both, shall appear to the commissioners to be a fair equivalent for the said tithes or glebe, or rights or easements, they shall be empowered to confirm and render valid such agreement; and in case the same shall not appear to be a fair equivalent, the said commissioners shall nevertheless be empowered to confirm such agreement, and also to make an award for such rent-charge, which with the said land or money, or both, will be a fair equivalent for the said tithes or glebe, or rights or easements, and, subject to such confirmation and award, to extinguish the right of the titheowners to the perception of the said tithes, or his title to the said glebe rights or easements, or to the receipt of any rent-charge instead thereof, other than the rent-charge awarded over and above the lands or money, or both, so confirmed to them.

“IX. And be it enacted, that in all cases, whether the tithes of any parish have been commuted or not, where any question as to the liability of any lands to the render of tithes, or as to the existence of any modus or composition real, or prescriptive or customary payment, or any claim of exemption from or non-liability to the payment of tithes in respect of any lands, shall have been heard and determined by the said commissioners, or by any assistant commissioner under their direction, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners or any assistant commissioner, after the time for appeal to a court of law from the said determination has elapsed, or in case there has been such appeal, after the judgment of the court on such appeal, to make an award, founded on the decision of the said commissioners or assistant commissioner, or the judgment of any court of law to which appeal shall have been made from the decision of the said commissioners or assistant commissioner, for the determination of all questions of arrears of tithes claimed in any suit which may be pending in any court of equity for the purpose of trying, as to the same lands, such liability, or the legality of such claim, modus, composition, or customary payment, and of the liability of any of the parties to payment of the costs of the proceedings in such suit, for which purpose they respectively shall have all the powers which under the said recited acts or any of them they have for ascertaining the value of the tithes of such lands; and such award shall have the effect of the verdict of a jury, on an issue directed by the court of Chancery satisfactory to the judge or court directing the same, and shall be received by the court of Chancery as conclusive evidence of the liability or non-liability of such lands, and of the amount of such arrears, and of the liability of the several parties to the payment of costs in such suit; and any order of the court of Chancery made thereon shall be binding on all parties, and no appeal to any other judge or court shall be brought against such order.

“X. And be it enacted, that where any question is or shall be brought for the decision of the tithe commissioners or any assistant commissioner, relative to any of the matters mentioned in an act passed in the third year of the reign of his late majesty, intituled, ‘An Act for shortening the Time required in Claims of Modus Decimandi, or Exemption from or Discharge of Tithes,’ as to which any such suit shall have been commenced and shall be pending as would have prevented the operation of the said recited act, such recited act shall not have any operation as to any award or decision respecting such question to be made by the said tithe commissioners or any assistant commissioner.

ment of all parts of the charge.

“XI. And be it enacted, that in any parish where any rent-charge has been agreed or awarded to be paid instead of tithes, and security has been given for payment of such rent-charge, and the lands in such parish have been discharged from payment or render of tithes or composition, or rent in the nature thereof, instead of tithes, before the apportionment of such rent-charge, it shall be lawful for the tithe commissioners, by a declaration in writing under the hands of any two of them, and their seal of office, to fix the same half-yearly days of payment of the whole rent-charge after apportionment thereof; and in consideration that the payment of some sums will be thereby accelerated, and the payment of other sums will be thereby deferred and retarded, to make such alterations and allowances in the payments to be made in the first year after the apportionment, both by way of interest for every sum of which payment will be thereby deferred, and by way of discount to be allowed for every sum of which payment will be thereby accelerated, as to the commissioners shall seem just.

Power to
owner of rent-charge to let land taken under writ of possession.

“XII. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for any owner of rent-charge, having taken possession of any land for non-payment of the rent-charge under the provisions of the first-recited act, from time to time during the continuance of such possession to let such land, or any part thereof, for any period not exceeding one year in possession, at such rent as can be reasonably obtained for the same; and the restitution of such land, on payment or satisfaction of the rent-charge, costs, and expenses, shall be subject and without prejudice to any such tenancy.

“XIII. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for any board of guardians of any parish or union, with the consent of the poor law commissioners, and subject to such conditions as the said poor law commissioners may prescribe, to pay out of the rates of any parish any portion of the cost of making or providing any map or plan which shall have been confirmed under the hands and seal of the tithe commissioners, or any other sum of money by way of consideration for the use of the said map or plan, for the purpose of estimating the net annual value of property in respect of which rates may be assessed for the relief of the poor; and after the tithe commissioners shall have certified in writing that such money has been paid, the overseers of the parish, or any person authorized by them in writing, or any officer of the said board of guardians, or any person authorized by them in writing, shall at all reasonable times have access to the copy of the said map or plan deposited with the incumbent and church or chapel wardens of the parish, or other persons approved by the said tithe commissioners, and may inspect and make copies or extracts from the said copy, without paying anything for such access or inspection, or for making such copies or extracts.

“XIV. And whereas by the first-recited act power is given for altering apportionments of rent-charge by the commissioners of land tax, on the application of the owner of the lands charged therewith, and it is expedient that the power thereby given should be extended, and also that during the continuance of the tithe commission the like power should be vested in the tithe commissioners; be it enacted, that if at any time after the confirmation of any instrument of apportionment it shall appear that the lands charged with one entire rent-charge belong to or have become vested in several owners, and that any of the owners of such lands shall be desirous that the apportionment thereof should be altered, it shall be lawful for the commissioners of land tax for the county or place where the said lands are situated, or any three of them, to appoint, by notice under their hands, a time and place for hearing the parties to such application, and all other parties interested therein; and upon satisfactory proof of such notice having been served on all parties interested full twenty-one days before the day of hearing, to proceed to alter the apportionment in such manner and in such proportion amongst the said lands as to them shall seem just, subject nevertheless to the consent of two justices of the peace, as in the said first-recited act provided; and further, that upon such application being made to the said tithe commissioners, they shall have the same power of making such alteration as by the said first-recited act and by this act is vested in the commissioners of land tax, and that without any such consent of two justices of the peace; provided, that no alteration of any apportionment shall be made under the first-recited act or this act whereby any rent-charge shall be subdivided, so that any subdivision thereof shall be less than five shillings.

“XV. And whereas it is expedient to make further provision for recording all such alterations of apportionment; be it enacted, that the registrar of every diocese, as soon as conveniently may be after the passing of this act, shall cause to be made and sent to the office of the tithe commissioners a copy, certified under his hand, of every instrument of altered apportionment in his custody which was made before the passing of this act, the reasonable cost of making and sending which copy shall be defrayed by the tithe commissioners as part of the expense of putting in execution the acts for the commutation of tithes; and after the passing of this act three counterparts shall be made of every instrument of altered apportionment at the expense of the landowner desiring the alteration; and two of the said counterparts shall be sent as provided by the first-recited act, and the third shall be sent to or deposited in the office of the tithe commissioners, or, after the expiration of the tithe commission, shall be sent to and kept by the person having custody of the records and papers of the said commission, and shall be annexed to the instrument of apportionment in the custody of the said commissioners, or the person having the custody of their records and papers.

“XVI. And be it enacted, that in case any land charged with one amount of rent-charge shall belong to two or more landowners in several portions, and the owner of any one of such portions, or his tenant, shall have paid the whole of such rent-charge, or any portion thereof greater than shall appear to him to be his just proportion, and contribution thereto shall have been refused or neglected to be made by any other of the said landowners, or his tenant, after a demand in writing made on them, or either of them, for that purpose, it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace acting for the county or other jurisdiction in which the land is situated, upon the complaint of any such landowner, or his tenant or agent, to summon the owner so refusing or neglecting to make contribution, or his tenant, to appear before any two or more such justices of the peace, who, upon proof of the demand and of service of the summons, as hereinafter provided, whether or not the party summoned shall appear, shall examine into the merits of the complaint, and determine the just proportion of the rent-charge so paid as aforesaid which ought to be contributed by the landowner of such other portion of the said land, and by order under their hands and seals shall direct the payment by him of what shall in their judgment be due and payable in respect of such liability to contribution, with the reasonable costs and charges of such proceedings, to be ascertained by such justices; and thereupon it shall be lawful for the complainant to take the like proceedings for enforcing payment of the said amount of contribution and costs, and with the like restriction as to the arrears recoverable, as are given to the owner of the rent-charge by the said first-mentioned act or this act for enforcing payment of the rent-charge.

“XVIII. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for all defendants in replevin, brought on any distress for rent-charge payable under the said first-recited act, or the several acts to amend the same, or this act, to avow or make cognizance generally that the lands and tenements whereon such distress was made were chargeable with or liable to the payment of a certain yearly amount of rent-charge under the provisions of the statutes for the commutation of tithes in England and Wales, which rent-charge, or some part thereof, was in arrear and unpaid for the space of twenty-one days next after some half-yearly day of payment thereof, and after ten days notice in writing, as required by the said acts, and that a certain amount of such rent-charge, according to the prices of corn, as directed by the said acts, was at the time of the said distress due to the person entitled to the rent-charge.

Irregularity
not to vitiate
proceedings.

“XIX. And be it enacted, that where any distress shall be made for any rent-charge payable under the said recited acts or any of them, or this act, and justly due, and any irregularity or unlawful act shall be afterwards done by the party distraining, or his agent, in the conduct, sale, or disposition of the distress, the distress itself shall not be therefore deemed to be unlawful, nor the party making it deemed a trespasser from the beginning, but the party aggrieved by such unlawful act or irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage in an action upon the case; provided nevertheless, that no plaintiff shall recover in any action for any such unlawful act or irregularity, if ten days notice in writing shall not have been given to the defendant by the plaintiff of his intention to bring such action before the commencement thereof, or if tender of sufficient amends has been made by the party distraining, or his agent, before such action brought, or if after action brought a sufficient sum of money shall have been paid into court, with costs, by or on behalf of the defendant.

present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that her majesty's commissioners for building new churches shall, within two years from the passing of this act, with the consent of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol for the time being, (within whose diocese the said forest is,) and of any two of the commissioners of her majesty's woods, forests, land revenues, works, and buildings, to be signified in writing under their hands and seals, divide all such part of the said forest of Dean and hundred of Saint Briavel's, as is extra-parochial, and bounded on or towards the north by the parishes of Ruardean, Hope Mansel, Weston-under-Penyard, and Lea, on or towards the north-east by the parishes of Mitchel Dean and Abinghall, on or towards the east by the parishes of Flaxley, Westbury, Newland, Little Dean, the hamlet of Lea, the said parish of Flaxley, and the said parish of Little Dean, on or towards the east by the parish of Newnham, on or towards the south-east by the parishes of Awre and Lydney, on or towards the south, south-west, and part west by the parish of Newland, and on or towards the west and north-west by the parish of English Bicknor, into separate districts for ecclesiastical purposes, and shall set out such districts by metes and bounds; and one of such districts shall contain the said chapel of Christchurch, and shall be called the ecclesiastical district of Christchurch; one other of such districts shall contain the said chapel of Holy Trinity, and shall be called the ecclesiastical district of Holy Trinity; one other of such districts shall contain the said chapel of Saint Paul, and shall be called the ecclesiastical district of Saint Paul; and one other of such districts shall contain the said chapel to be built at Cinderford aforesaid, and shall be called the ecclesiastical district of Saint John; and the instrument ascertaining and setting out the said districts shall be registered in the registry of the Bishop of the diocese of Gloucester and Bristol, and enrolled in the office of Land Revenue Records and Enrolments; and when such instrument shall have been so registered and enrolled, the said districts shall be taken and considered as ecclesiastical districts attached to the said chapels therein respectively, in all respects as if the same districts had been divided and made by her majesty's commissioners for building new churches under the powers vested in them by law; and all laws and provisions applicable or to be made applicable to district parishes, set out and divided by such commissioners, shall apply to the districts so to be set out in pursuance of this act, save and except as is otherwise provided for by this act; provided always, that until the said intended chapel at Cinderford has been built and consecrated, her majesty's commissioners for building new churches shall not assign an ecclesiastical district thereto; and if such intended chapel shall not be built and consecrated within two years from the passing of this act, it shall in that case be lawful for the said commissioners, and they are hereby required, to assign such ecclesiastical district within two years after such intended chapel has been built and consecrated.

"II. And be it enacted, that the said chapels to which the said districts shall be assigned shall, from and after such registry and enrolment, be deemed perpetual curacies, and the ministers of the said chapels shall be perpetual curates of such districts; and each of such curacies shall be considered in law as a benefice presentative, so far only as that the licence thereto shall operate in the same manner as institution to any such benefice, and shall render voidable other livings in like manner as institution to any such benefice; and the spiritual persons now or hereafter serving the same shall be considered as the incumbents thereof respectively; and such incumbents thereof, from the time of such registry and enrolment as aforesaid, shall have perpetual succession, and shall be and are hereby declared to be bodies politic and corporate, and may receive and take endowments in land or tithes, or both, or any such augmentation as shall be granted to them or their successors; and all lands and other endowments now vested in any trustees or trustee for the ministers of the said chapels respectively, (other than the said funds in the names of the said governors of the bounty of Queen Anne,) and the said chapels and burial grounds, and the sites thereof, shall, from and after such registry and enrolment as aforesaid, be vested in the ministers of the said chapels respectively, and their successors respectively, for ever, in the same manner as the

And be it enacted, that marriages, baptisms, churchings, and burials may be solemnized and performed in the said chapels, and fees, to be from time to time fixed and allowed by the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol for the time being, may be taken for the same by the respective incumbents for the time being of the said chapels and intended chapel, and all acts of parliament, laws and customs relating to publishing banns of marriage, marriages, christenings, churchings, and burials, and the registering thereof, and to all ecclesiastical fees, oblations, and offerings, shall apply to such districts, when the same shall be registered and enrolled as aforesaid, in like manner in every respect as if the same districts were ancient and distinct parishes, and the said chapels and intended chapel were respectively parish churches in law, to all intents and purposes.

chapels of Christchurch, Holy Trinity, and Saint Paul, to commence from the passing of this act, and as regards the intended chapel at Cinderford, to commence from and after the time that the same shall have been built and consecrated, and a minister or curate presented and inducted thereto, and to continue until the purchase of such stock.

“V. And be it enacted, that the said commissioners of her majesty’s woods, forests, land revenues, works, and buildings shall, out of such monies as aforesaid, when the said chapel at Cinderford aforesaid shall have been built and consecrated, purchase the sum of three hundred and thirty-three pounds six shillings and eight pence three per centum consolidated bank annuities, in the names of the first commissioner of woods and the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol for the time being, and which said sum of three hundred and thirty-three pounds six shillings and eight pence, and the said sum of one thousand pounds, like stock, so now standing in the names of the said first commissioner and the said bishop, shall be held upon trust to apply the dividends thereof as a fund for the maintaining and repairing the fabrics of the aforesaid three chapels, and the said chapel at Cinderford, when built and consecrated, such dividends to be applied in equal shares; and any part of such dividends may, at the discretion of such first commissioner and bishop, be applied in insuring the said chapels, or any of them, from loss or damage by fire.

“VI. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners of her majesty’s woods, forests, land revenues, works, and buildings, or any two of them, on behalf of her majesty, her heirs and successors, to grant to the respective ministers of the said chapels, and their successors respectively, any part of the hereditary revenues of the crown within the said forest, to be appropriated for the said chapels, as after mentioned; (that is to say,) any part not exceeding one acre for each of the said three chapels already built, to be applied for the purpose of increasing the sites of the burial grounds thereto belonging, and any part not exceeding six acres as a site for the intended chapel at Cinderford and the burial ground thereof, and the parsonage house and garden for the minister thereof.

Britain, and to grant other Duties in lieu thereof; and also to consolidate and amend the Laws relating thereto, certain duties contained in the schedule (A) to the last-mentioned act annexed were granted for and in respect of every licence for keeping, using, and employing any stage carriage, and for and in respect of all passengers conveyed for hire along any railway in Great Britain in or upon carriages drawn or impelled by the power of steam or otherwise: and whereas by an act passed in the fifty-fifth year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled, 'An Act for repealing the Stamp Duties on Deeds, Law Proceedings, and other written or printed Instruments, and the Duties on Fire Insurances, and on Legacies and Successions to Personal Estate upon Intestacies, now payable in Great Britain; and for granting other Duties in lieu thereof,' certain stamp duties were granted and imposed, amongst others, upon bills of lading and charter-parties in Great Britain, and upon instruments of collation, donation, presentation, and institution of and to any ecclesiastical benefice, dignity, or promotion in England, and upon certain licences hereinafter mentioned; and it is expedient that all the said duties should be repealed, and others granted in lieu thereof; be it therefore enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the commencement of this act the aforesaid duties granted and imposed by the said act passed in the second and third years of her majesty's reign for and in respect of every mile which any stage carriage shall be licensed to travel, and the aforesaid duties granted and imposed by the said act passed in the second and third years of the reign of his late majesty King William the Fourth, for and in respect of every licence for keeping, using, or employing any stage carriage, and for and in respect of passengers conveyed for hire along any railway in Great Britain, and the duties hereinafter mentioned, granted and imposed by the said act passed in the fifty-fifth year of the reign of King George the Third, (that is to say,) the duty of three shillings upon any bill of lading of or for any goods, merchandize, or effects to be exported or carried coastwise, and the several duties of one pound fifteen shillings and one pound five shillings upon any charter-party, or any agreement or contract for the charter of any ship or vessel, or any memorandum, letter, or other writing between the captain, master, or owner of any ship or vessel, and any other person, for or relating to the freight or conveyance of any money, goods, or effects on board of such ship or vessel, and the several and respective duties of twenty pounds and ten pounds upon any collation, donation, or presentation of or to any ecclesiastical benefice, dignity, or promotion in England, and the several and respective duties of two pounds, thirty pounds, and fifteen pounds upon any institution in and to any ecclesiastical benefice, dignity, or promotion in England, and the duty of two pounds upon any licence which shall pass the seal of any archbishop, bishop, chancellor, or other ordinary, or of any ecclesiastical court in England, so far as relating to any licence to hold a perpetual curacy in England, not proceeding upon a nomination, shall severally cease and determine, and the same shall be and are hereby repealed, save and except such of the said respective duties, or so much and such part or parts thereof respectively as shall have become due or payable or have been incurred before or upon the day appointed for the commencement of this act with regard to such duties respectively, all which said duties or parts of duties so due or incurred, or remaining to be paid as aforesaid, shall be recoverable by the same ways and means, and with and under the same penalties, and in the same manner, in all respects, as if this act had not been made.

"II. And be it enacted, that in lieu of the duties by this act repealed there shall be raised, levied, collected, and paid, unto and for the use of her majesty, her heirs and successors in and throughout Great Britain, for and in respect of every licence for keeping, using, or employing any stage carriage in Great Britain, and for and in respect of every stage carriage, and for and in respect of the passengers conveyed upon any railway, and also for and in respect of the several instruments, matters, and things mentioned and described in the schedule to this act annexed, or for or in respect of the vellum, parchment, or paper upon which such instruments matters, and things, or any of them, shall be written or printed, the several duties or sums of money set down in figures against the same respectively, or otherwise specified and set forth in the same schedule; and that the said schedule shall be deemed and taken to be a part of this act; and that all the said duties shall be under the care and management of the commissioners of stamps and taxes for the time being, and shall be denominated and deemed to be stamp duties.

“XXIII. And whereas by the said recited act of the fifty-fifth year of the reign of King George the Third the commissioners of the Treasury are authorized to allow time for making claims for a return of stamp duty paid upon probates of wills and letters of administration in cases where an executor or administrator hath paid debts out of the personal or moveable estate of any deceased person, and it is expedient to authorize the commissioners of stamps and taxes to allow time for making such claims; be it therefore enacted, that where it shall be proved by oath and proper vouchers, to the satisfaction of the said commissioners of stamps and taxes, that an executor or administrator hath paid debts due and owing from the deceased, and payable by law out of his or her personal or moveable estate, to such an amount as, being deducted from the amount or value of the estate and effects of the deceased for or in respect of which a probate or letters of administration shall have been granted in England after the thirty-first day of August, one thousand eight hundred and fifteen, or which shall be included in any inventory duly exhibited and recorded after that day in a commissary court in Scotland, shall reduce the same to a sum which, if it had been the whole gross amount or value of such estate or effects, would have occasioned a less stamp duty to be paid on such probate or letters of administration or inventory than shall have been actually paid thereon, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners of stamps and taxes and they are hereby required to return the difference, provided the same shall be claimed within three years after the date of such probate or letters of administration, or the recording of such inventory as aforesaid; but where, by reason of any proceeding at law or in equity, the debts due from the deceased shall not have been ascertained and paid, or the effects of the deceased shall not have been recovered and made available, and in consequence thereof the executor or administrator shall be prevented from claiming such return of duty as aforesaid within the said term of three years, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners of stamps and taxes to allow such further time for making the claim as may appear to them to be reasonable under the circumstances of the case.”

c. 30.

"Whereas in and by an act passed in the fourth and fifth years of the reign of her present majesty, intituled, 'An Act for taking away the Punishment of Death in certain Cases, and substituting other Punishments in lieu thereof,' it was amongst other things enacted, that whereas by an act passed in the eighth year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Fourth, intituled, 'An Act for consolidating and amending the Laws relating to malicious Injuries to Property,' it was amongst other things enacted, that if any persons riotously and tumultuously assembled together to the disturbance of the public peace should unlawfully and with force demolish, pull down, or destroy, or begin to demolish, pull down, or destroy, any church or chapel, or any chapel for the religious worship of persons dissenting from the united church of England and Ireland, duly registered or recorded, or any house, stable, coachhouse, outhouse, warehouse, office, shop, mill, malthouse, hopoust, barn, granary, or any building or erection used in carrying on any trade or manufacture, or any branch thereof, or any machinery, whether fixed or moveable, prepared for or employed in any manufacture, or in any branch thereof, or any steam engine or other engine for sinking, draining, or working any mine, or any staith, building, or erection used in conducting the business of any mine, or any bridge, waggon-way, or trunk for conveying minerals from any mine, every such offender should be deemed guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof should suffer death as a felon; and that in case of every felony punishable under that act every principal in the second degree and every accessory before the fact should be punishable with death or otherwise, in the same manner as the principal in the first degree was by that act punishable: and whereas it was expedient that the said last-mentioned offences should be no longer punishable with death; that from and after the commencement of the said act of the fourth and fifth years of the reign of her present majesty, if any person should be convicted of any of the offences hereinbefore specified, whether as principal, or as principal in the second degree, or as accessory before the fact, such person should not be subject to any sentence, judgment, or punishment of death, but should, instead of the sentence or judgment in and by the said act hereinbefore first recited ordered to be given and awarded against persons convicted of the abovementioned offences or any of them respectively, be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any time not exceeding three years: and whereas doubts have arisen whether such offenders are liable, under the provisions of the said act of the fourth and fifth years of the reign of her present majesty hereinbefore recited, to be transported beyond the seas for the term of their natural lives: and whereas it is expedient to put an end to such doubts: be it therefore enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the passing of this act, if any person shall be convicted of any of the offences hereinbefore in the said act first above recited specified, such person shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for the term of the natural life of such person, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any time not exceeding three years."

"Whereas it is expedient to make better provision for the spiritual care of populous parishes, and to render the estates and revenues vested in 'the ecclesiastical commissioners for England,' and the funds at the disposal of 'the governors of the bounty of Queen Anne for the augmentation of the maintenance of the poor clergy,' applicable immediately to such purpose: be it therefore enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that the said ecclesiastical commissioners for England may, upon the conditions hereinafter mentioned, forthwith borrow, and the said governors of the bounty of Queen Anne, together with the Most Reverend William Howley Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, may, upon the security hereinafter mentioned, forthwith lend and transfer to the said commissioners, the capital sum of six hundred thousand pounds three pounds per centum reduced bank annuities, part of a certain sum of such stock now standing in the names of the said governors and of the said archbishop in the books of the governor and company of the bank of England.

"II. And be it enacted, that at any time and from time to time the said commissioners may borrow, and the said governors and the Archbishop of Canterbury for the time being may, if they shall think fit, lend and transfer to the said commissioners, in like manner, and upon the like security and conditions, any further capital sum or sums of stock, being part of the stock so standing as aforesaid.

"III. And be it enacted, that the said commissioners shall, upon the transfer of any such stock as aforesaid into their names in the books of the said governor and company, accept the same in such books, and shall pay or cause to be paid to the said governors, by half-yearly payments on the tenth day of April and the fourteenth day of October in every year, a sum equal in amount to the amount of the dividends which such stock, or so much thereof as shall on such days respectively remain unreplaced, would produce; and that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners at any time to replace the whole or any part of any such sum of stock.

"IV. And be it enacted, that all the monies from time to time accruing to the said commissioners by reason of the suspension of canonries by or under the provisions of an act passed in the session of parliament held in the third and fourth years of the reign of her present majesty, intituled, 'An Act to carry into effect, with certain Modifications, the Fourth Report of the Commissioners of Ecclesiastical Duties and Revenues,' and of an act passed in the session of parliament held in the fourth and fifth years of the reign of her present majesty, intituled, 'An Act to explain and amend two several Acts relating to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England,' and all the lands, tithes, rent-charges, tenements, and other hereditaments vested or to be vested in them under the provisions of the same acts or of this act, and the rents and profits thereof, shall be and the same are hereby charged and made chargeable with all such half-yearly payments as aforesaid, and also with the repayment and replacing of the whole capital stock so to be lent and transferred to them, if any such half-yearly payment, or any part thereof, shall remain unpaid for twenty days next after either of the days upon which the same shall have become due and payable as aforesaid; and that upon any such default as last mentioned the said governors shall, by virtue of this act, and upon proof of such default, have the same and the like remedies at law against the said ecclesiastical commissioners for England, and upon and over all the monies, lands, tithes, rent-charges, tenements, and other hereditaments in their possession or power under the provisions of the said recited acts, for the recovery of such capital stock, or so much thereof as shall then remain unreplaced, together with all arrears of half-yearly payments due thereon as aforesaid, as if the said commissioners had duly executed a deed under their common seal, covenanting for repayment to the said governors of such stock, and for making such half-yearly payment on the day when such default shall have become complete as aforesaid; and that such transfer and acceptance as aforesaid shall be sufficient evidence of such covenant.

“V. Provided also, and be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said governors, if they shall see fit, at or after the expiration of thirty years from the date of the lending and transferring of the said sum, and at or after the expiration of a like number of years from and after the lending and transferring of any further sum of such stock as aforesaid, to give notice to the said commissioners, in writing under their corporate seal, requiring them to replace, in the names of the said governors and of the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury for the time being, the whole of such sums of stock respectively, or such part thereof respectively as shall at the date of such notice remain unreplaced, and the said commissioners shall proceed to replace the same accordingly, by yearly instalments, amounting at the least to one twelfth part of such sums of stock respectively, or of such remaining part thereof as aforesaid, and upon default of their duly replacing any such instalment the said governors shall have the like remedies for recovering the same, as for any default in making any such half-yearly payment as aforesaid.

“VI. And be it enacted, that, notwithstanding the charge by this act created, all the same and the like rights and powers of ownership as are possessed and enjoyed respecting and over any lands, tithes, rent-charges, tenements, or other hereditaments whatsoever, by any absolute owner thereof, shall be enjoyed by the said commissioners with respect to and over all or any lands, tithes, rent-charges, tenements, and other hereditaments vested and liable to be vested in them by or under the provisions of the said recited acts, and may, subject to the provisions of the same acts and of this act, be exercised by them, by proper instruments in writing duly executed according to law, but in the case of any such lands, tithes, rent-charges, and other hereditaments not actually in their possession, with the consent of the respective holders thereof, testified by their being made parties to such instruments; and that the consent of the said governors shall not be in any case required to the exercise by the said commissioners of any such rights and powers as aforesaid, notwithstanding such charge: provided always, that every sum of money received as the consideration or purchase money for the sale, transfer, or conveyance by the said commissioners of any of such lands, tithes, tenements, or other hereditaments, or of any estate or interest therein, and also every sum of money received by them as the foregift or fine for the granting or renewing of any lease, shall, unless it be deemed expedient by the said commissioners to apply any such sum or any part thereof in replacing any stock so lent and transferred as aforesaid, which they are hereby empowered to do, be applied by them so soon as conveniently may be after the receipt thereof, in the purchase of lands, tithes, rent-charges, tenements, or other hereditaments, or of some estate or interest therein, and shall in the meantime be invested in some government or parliamentary stock or other public securities in England, the said commissioners being at liberty to apply the interest and dividends of such stock or securities, and the rents and profits of such lands, rent-charges, tithes, tenements, and other hereditaments, to the purposes of the said recited acts or of this act.

“VII. And be it enacted, that the said commissioners shall, for the purposes and subject to the provisions of the said recited acts and of this act, have full power and right of property over all the stock so lent and transferred to them by the said governors as aforesaid.

“VIII. Provided always, and be it enacted, that no part of the capital of such stock shall be applied to such purposes as aforesaid, nor shall any such lands, tithes, tenements, or other hereditaments as aforesaid be sold, transferred, or conveyed, except by the authority in the said recited acts provided; (that is to say,) by a scheme prepared by the said commissioners, and an order issued by her majesty in council ratifying such scheme.

“IX. And whereas there are divers parishes, chapelries, and districts of great extent, and containing a large population, wherein or in parts whereof the provision for public worship and for pastoral superintendence is insufficient for the spiritual wants of the inhabitants thereof; be it therefore enacted, that if at any “X. And be it enacted, that a map or plan, setting forth and describing such metes and bounds, shall be annexed to the scheme for constituting such district, and transmitted therewith to her majesty in council, and a copy thereof shall be registered by the registrar of the diocese, together with any order issued by her majesty in council for ratifying such scheme: provided always that it shall not be necessary to publish any such map or plan in the London Gazette.

Minister to be district.

“XI. And be it enacted, that upon any such district being so constituted, a minister may and shall be nominated thereto in manner hereinafter provided, and may thereupon be licensed thereto by the bishop, and shall have power to perform and shall perform within such district all such pastoral duties appertaining to the office of a minister according to the rites and usages of the united church of England and Ireland as shall be specified and set forth in his licence, and, when a building shall be licensed within such district for divine worship in manner hereinafter provided, shall also perform such services and offices as shall be specified and set forth in the same or any further licence granted in that behalf by the bishop of the diocese: and such minister shall perform such pastoral duties, services, and offices respectively, independently of the incumbent or minister of the church of any parish, chapelry, or district out of which such new district or any part thereof shall have been taken, and shall, so far as the performance of the same may be authorized by such licence or licences, have the cure of souls in and over such new district: provided always, that no burials shall be performed in such licensed building, and that nothing in this act contained shall empower such bishop to include in any such licence the solemnisation of marriages.

Style and character of minister;

“XII. And be it enacted, that such minister shall be styled ‘The Minister of the District of _____,’ according to the name thereof so fixed as aforesaid, and shall be in all respects subject to the jurisdiction of the bishop and archdeacon within whose diocese and archdeaconry such district shall be situate, and shall only be removable from his office of such minister for the like reasons and in the same manner as any perpetual curate is now by law removable; and such minister shall be a body politic and corporate, and shall have perpetual succession, as

and power to

well by the name and in the character aforesaid, as by the name and in the character of perpetual curate hereinafter mentioned and provided, as the case may be; and such minister and perpetual curate respectively may, in such name and character respectively, notwithstanding the Statutes of Mortmain, receive and take, to him and his successors, as well every grant of endowment or augmentation made or granted by the authority aforesaid, as also any real or personal estate or effects whatsoever which any person or persons or body corporate may give or grant to him according to law.

“XIII. And be it declared and enacted, that it shall be lawful for the bishop of the diocese, at any time after the constituting of any such district as aforesaid, to license any building, within such district, which he may consider to be fit and proper for such purpose, for the performance of divine service by such minister according to the rites and usages of such united church; and such minister may for any churchings performed under any such licence receive such fees as shall be fixed and determined in manner hereinafter provided; and all laws now in force relating to the registration of baptisms shall apply to all baptisms performed under any such licence.

“XIV. Provided always, and be it enacted, that, until a church or chapel shall have been built or acquired within such district, and shall have been approved and consecrated as hereinafter provided, nothing herein contained shall prejudice or affect the right of any incumbent of any other church or chapel, who before the constituting of such district possessed the entire cure of souls within the same or any part thereof, to publish any banns, solemnize any marriages, or perform any burials in his own church or chapel which he could have published, solemnized, or performed therein, or to receive any fees, dues, or emoluments (except the fees hereinbefore authorized to be received by the minister of such district) which as such incumbent he could have received if such district had not been constituted, nor any right to attend divine service in any other church or chapel, which any inhabitant of such district possessed before such district was constituted.

“XV. And be it enacted, that, when any church or chapel shall be built, purchased, or acquired in any district constituted as aforesaid, and shall have been approved by the said commissioners, by an instrument in writing under their common seal, and consecrated as the church or chapel of such district, for the use and service of the minister and inhabitants thereof, such district shall, from and after the consecration of such church or chapel, be and be deemed to be a new parish for ecclesiastical purposes, and shall be known as such by the name of ‘The new Parish of _____,’ instead of ‘The District of _____,’ according to the name so as aforesaid fixed for such district; and such church or chapel shall become and be the church of such new parish accordingly; and any licence granted by the bishop, licensing any building for divine worship as aforesaid, shall thereupon become void; and it shall be lawful to publish banns of matrimony in such church, and according to the laws and canons in force in this realm to solemnize therein marriages, baptisms, churchings, and burials, and to require and receive such fees upon the solemnization of such offices or any of them as shall be fixed by the chancellor of the diocese in which such new parish shall be situate, and which fees, and also the fees for churchings to be received as aforesaid by the minister of such district, such chancellor is hereby empowered and required to fix accordingly; and the like Easter offerings and dues may be received within the limits of such new parish by the perpetual curate thereof as are and were, at and before the time of the passing of this act, payable to the incumbent of the church of the principal parish of which such new parish originally formed a part; and the several laws, statutes, and customs in force relating to the publication of banns of matrimony, and to the performance of marriages, baptisms, churchings, and burials, and the registering thereof respectively, and to the suing for and recovering of fees, oblations, or offerings in respect thereof, shall apply to the church of such new parish, and to the perpetual curate thereof for the time being: provided always, that it shall not be lawful for any such minister or perpetual curate to receive any fee for the performance of any baptism, within his district or new parish as the case may be, or for the registration thereof.

"XVI. And be it enacted, that upon any such district so becoming a new parish, the minister of such district, having been duly licensed, shall, without any further process or form in law, become and be perpetual curate of such new parish and of the church thereof, and shall have exclusive cure of souls in and over such parish; and shall be a body politic and corporate, and have perpetual succession; and that such parish and church shall be and be deemed to be a perpetual curacy, and a benefice with cure of souls, to all intents and purposes.

"XVII. And be it enacted, that in every such case of a district so becoming a new parish two fit and proper persons, being members of the united church of England and Ireland, shall, within twenty-one days from the consecration of the church thereof, be chosen churchwardens for such new parish, one being chosen by the perpetual curate thereof, and the other by the inhabitants, residing therein and having a similar qualification to that which would entitle inhabitants to vote at the election of churchwardens for the principal parish as aforesaid, or the majority of such inhabitants, and such election shall take place at a meeting to be summoned in such manner in all respects as such perpetual curate shall direct; and such persons shall continue such churchwardens until the next usual period of appointing parish officers following their appointment; and at the like time in every year two such persons shall thenceforward be chosen by the perpetual curate for the time being and inhabitants assembled as aforesaid; and every person so chosen as aforesaid shall be duly admitted, and shall do all things pertaining to the office of churchwarden as to ecclesiastical matters in the said new parish: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall render any such churchwardens liable or competent to perform the duties of overseer of the poor in respect of such their office of churchwardens.

"XVIII. Provided always, and be it enacted, that, until parliament shall otherwise determine, nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect or alter any rights, privileges, or liabilities whatsoever, ecclesiastical or civil, of any parish, chapelry, or district, except as is herein expressly provided.

"XIX. And be it enacted, that the said recited acts, so far as they apply to making better provision for the cure of souls, shall extend to authorize the endowment or augmentation of the income of such ministers and perpetual curates as aforesaid, to such an amount or in such proportion, and in such manner, as shall be deemed expedient, by the authority aforesaid; and also to authorize the assigning, at any time and from time to time, to the incumbent of any church or chapel, whose fees, dues, or other emoluments shall be diminished by or in consequence of any proceeding under the provisions of this act, and, if it be deemed fit by the like authority, to his successors also, of such an annual sum as shall, upon due inquiry, appear to be a just and reasonable compensation for such diminution.

"XX. And be it enacted, any law, statute, or canon to the contrary notwithstanding, that it shall be lawful, by the authority aforesaid, at any time, to assign the right of patronage of any such district or new parish as aforesaid, and the nomination of the minister or perpetual curate thereof respectively, either in perpetuity or for one or more nomination or nominations, to any ecclesiastical corporation, aggregate or sole, or to either of the universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or Durham, or to any college therein respectively, or to any person or persons, or the nominee or nominees of such person or persons or body respectively, upon condition of such corporation, university, college, person or persons contributing to the permanent endowment of such minister or perpetual curate, or towards providing a church or chapel for the use of the inhabitants of such district or new parish, in such proportion and in such manner as shall be approved by the like authority.

"XXI. And be it enacted, that the right of patronage and nomination of every such minister and perpetual curate, unless or until such right of patronage and nomination shall be otherwise wholly assigned, or except so far as the same shall be otherwise in part assigned, under the provisions in that behalf hereinbefore last contained, shall and may be exercised, alternately, by her majesty and her successors and the bishop of the diocese for the time being in which the district or new parish shall be situate; the first such nomination being in each case made by her majesty.

“XXII. And for the encouragement of such persons as shall be disposed to contribute towards the purposes of this act, and that their charity may be rightly applied, be it enacted, that all and every person or persons, or body corporate, having in his or their own right any estate or interest in possession, reversion, or contingency of or in any lands, tithes, tenements, or other hereditaments, or any property of or in any goods or chattels, shall have full power, licence, and authority, at his and their will and pleasure, by deed enrolled in such manner and within such time as is directed by the statute made in the twenty-seventh year of the reign of King Henry the Eighth, intituled, ‘An Act concerning Enrolments of Bargains and Contracts of Lands and Tenements,’ in the case of any lands, tithes, tenements, or other hereditaments, (but without any deed in the case of any goods or chattels,) or by his or their testament in writing, duly executed according to law, to give and grant to and vest in the said ecclesiastical commissioners for England and their successors all such his or their estate, interest, or property in such lands, tithes, tenements, or other hereditaments, goods, and chattels, or any part or parts thereof, for and towards the endowment or augmentation of the income of such ministers or perpetual curates as aforesaid, or for or towards providing any church or chapel for the purposes and subject to the provisions of this act, and to be for such purposes respectively applied, according to the will of such benefactors respectively, as in and by such deed enrolled, or such testament, executed as aforesaid, may be expressed, or, in the case of no deed or testament, as may in some other manner be directed, and in default of such expression or direction then in such manner as shall be directed by the authority hereinbefore mentioned; and such commissioners and their successors shall have full capacity and ability to purchase, receive, take, hold, and enjoy for the purposes aforesaid, as well from such persons as shall be so charitably disposed to give the same, as from all other persons who shall be willing to sell or aliene to the said commissioners any lands, tithes, tenements, or other hereditaments, goods, or chattels, without any licence or writ of ad quod damnum, the Statute of Mortmain, or any other statute or law, to the contrary notwithstanding.

“XXIII. And be it enacted, that all the powers and authorities vested in her majesty in council and in the said commissioners by the said recited acts, with reference to the matters therein contained, and all other the provisions of the same acts relating to schemes and orders prepared, made, and issued for the purposes thereof, shall be continued and extended and shall apply to her majesty in council and to the said commissioners, and to all schemes and orders prepared, made, and issued by them respectively, with reference to all matters contained in this act, as fully and effectually as if the said powers, authorities, and other provisions were repeated herein; and the provisions contained in an act passed in the second year of her majesty’s reign, intituled, ‘An Act to abridge the holding of Benefices in Plurality, and to make better Provision for the Residence of the Clergy,’ respecting the party or parties to be deemed patron or patrons, for the purposes of notice to be served upon and consent to be given by such patron or patrons, and also respecting the manner in which and the party by whom any such consent is to be given, shall be construed to apply to the like matters respectively under this act.

“XXIV. And whereas it may be expedient that her majesty’s commissioners for building new churches should be able to apply a portion of the funds placed at their disposal towards promoting the purposes of this act; be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to make any such grant in aid of the erection of any such new church or chapel as aforesaid as shall seem fit to them, if they are authorized so to do under the Church Building Acts, although the right of patronage of such church or chapel may not belong on the consecration thereof to the incumbent of the original parish in which such church or chapel shall be situate, anything in such acts to the contrary notwithstanding.

“XXV. And whereas an act was passed in the seventeenth year of the reign of King Charles the Second, intituled, ‘An Act for uniting Churches in Cities and a special order of her majesty.

"Whereas it has been found expedient to make further regulations for hearing and making report to her majesty in appeals and other matters referred to the judicial committee of the Privy Council, and for the more effectual appointment of surrogates in ecclesiastical and maritime causes of appeal, and for making orders or decrees incidental to such causes of appeal, and for the punishment of contempt, and compelling appearances and enforcement of judgments, orders, and decrees of her majesty in council, or of the said judicial committee, or their surrogates, in such causes of appeal; be it enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that in any appeal, application for prolongation or confirmation of letters patent, or other matter referred or hereafter to be referred by her majesty in council to the judicial committee of the Privy Council, it shall be lawful for her majesty, by order in council or special direction under her royal sign manual, having regard to the nature of the said appeal or other matter, and in respect of the same not requiring the presence of more than three members of the said committee, to order that the same be heard, and when so ordered it shall be lawful that the same shall be accordingly heard by not less than three of the members of the said judicial committee, subject to such other rules as are applicable, or under this act may be applicable, to the hearing and making report on appeals and other matters by four or more of the members of the said judicial committee.

judicial committee and

gates in respect to appeals from ecclesiastical and admiralty courts.

"II. And be it enacted, that in respect of all incidents, emergencies, dependents, and things adjoined to, arising out of, or connected with appeals from any ecclesiastical court, or from any admiralty or vice-admiralty court, (save in giving a definitive sentence, or any interlocutory decree having the force and effect of a definitive sentence,) the said judicial committee and their surrogates shall have full power, subject to such rules, orders, and regulations as shall from time to time be made by the said judicial committee, (with the approval of her majesty in council,) to make all such interlocutory orders and decrees, and to administer all such oaths and affirmations, and to do all such things as may be necessary, or the judges of the courts below appealed from or their surrogates in the cases appealed, or the judges of the courts appealed to or their surrogates, or the lords commissioners of appeals in prize causes or their surrogates, and the judges delegate or their condelegates under commissions of appeal under the great seal in ecclesiastical and maritime causes of appeal, would respectively have had before an act passed in the third year of the reign of his late majesty, intituled, 'An Act for transferring the Powers of the High Court of Delegates, both in Ecclesiastical and Maritime Causes, to His Majesty in Council,' and another act passed in the following session of parliament, intituled, 'An Act for the better Administration of Justice in His Majesty's Privy Council,' were passed.

"III. And be it enacted, that the surrogates and examiners of the Arches court of Canterbury and the high court of Admiralty of England, and such persons as shall from time to time be appointed surrogates or examiners of the said courts, shall be by virtue of this act surrogates and examiners respectively of the judicial committee of the Privy Council in all causes of appeal from ecclesiastical courts and from any admiralty or vice-admiralty court.

"IV. And be it enacted, that all orders, decrees, and things heretofore done and expedited in such causes of appeal by the surrogates appointed by the said judicial committee of the Privy Council shall be deemed to be valid and effectual, if otherwise lawfully done and expedited, notwithstanding any informality or want of authority in respect to the same in the orders of his late majesty in council of the fourth day of February, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-three, of the said judicial committee of the fifth day of February, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-three, of the order of his late majesty in council of the ninth day of December, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-three, of an order of the said judicial committee of the tenth day of December, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-three, and an order of his late majesty in council of the twelfth day of August, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-five.

"V. And be it enacted, that, subject to such rules and regulations as may from time to time be made by the said judicial committee with the approval of her majesty in council, and save and in so much as the practice thereof may be varied by the said acts of the reign of his late majesty or by this act, the said causes of appeal to her majesty in council shall be commenced within the same times, and conducted in the same form and manner, and by the same persons and officers, as if appeals in the same causes had been made to the queen in Chancery, the high court of Admiralty of England, or the lords commissioners of appeals in prize causes respectively; and all things otherwise lawfully done and expedited in the said causes of appeal by the registrar of the high court of Admiralty of England, his deputy or deputies, in consequence of the passing of the said acts of the reign of his late majesty, shall be deemed to be valid to all intents whatsoever.

"VI. And whereas by the provisions of the hereinbefore secondly-recited act it was enacted, that the said judicial committee should have and enjoy in all respects such and the same power of punishing contempts and of compelling appearances, and that his majesty in council should have and enjoy in all respects such and the same powers of enforcing judgments, decrees, and orders, (both in personam and in rem,) as are given to any court ecclesiastical by an act of parliament passed in a session of parliament of the second and third years of the reign of his majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, 'An Act for enforcing the Process upon Contempts in the Courts Ecclesiastical of England and Ireland,' and that all such powers as are given to courts ecclesiastical, if of punishing contempts or of compelling appearances, should be exercised by the said judicial committee, and of enforcing decrees and orders should be exercised by his majesty in council, in such and the same manner as the powers in and by such act of parliament given, and should be of as much force and effect as if the same had been thereby expressly given to the said committee or to his majesty in council: be it enacted, that so much of the said act as relates to the powers thereby given to the said judicial committee and to his majesty in council, under the last-recited act, shall be repealed.

And be it enacted, that in all causes of appeal to her majesty in council from ecclesiastical courts, and from admiralty or vice-admiralty courts, in which any person duly monished or cited or required to comply with any lawful order or decree of her majesty in council, or of the said judicial committee or their surrogates, and neglecting or refusing to pay obedience to such lawful order or decree, or committing any contempt of the process under the seal of her majesty in ecclesiastical and maritime causes, shall reside out of the dominions of her majesty, or shall have privilege of peerage, or shall be a lord of parliament or a member of the house of commons, it shall be lawful for the said judicial committee or their surrogates to pronounce such person to be contumacious and in contempt, and after he shall have been so pronounced contumacious and in contempt to cause process of sequestration to issue under the said seal of her majesty against the real and personal estate, goods, chattels, and effects, wheresoever lying within the dominions of her majesty, of the person against or upon whom such order or decree shall have been made, in order to enforce obedience to the same, and payment of the expenses attending such sequestration, and all proceedings consequent thereon, and to make such further order in respect of or consequent on such sequestration, and in respect of such real and personal estate, goods, chattels, and effects sequestered thereby, as may be necessary, or for payment of monies arising from the same to the person to whom the same may be due or into the registry of the high court of Admiralty and Appeals for the benefit of those who may be ultimately entitled thereto.

And be it enacted, that in all appeals in ecclesiastical and maritime causes to her majesty in council it shall be lawful for her majesty in council, and the said judicial committee or their surrogates, at the petition of any person interested in the same, to decree monitions for the transmission of any sum or sums of money respecting which any order or decree may be made, or any questions may be depending arising out of such causes, and the proceeds of all ships or vessels, goods, and cargoes respecting which any appeals may be depending, into the registry of the high court of Admiralty and Appeals, for the benefit of the person or persons who may be ultimately entitled thereto, or for payment thereof to the person to whom the same may be lawfully due.

"XI. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for her majesty, by order in council, to direct that all causes of appeal from ecclesiastical courts, and from the vice-admiralty court of the Cape of Good Hope, and all vice-admiralty courts to the westward thereof, in which the appeal and petition of reference to her majesty shall have been lodged in the registry of the high court of Admiralty and Appeals within twelve calendar months from the giving or pronouncing of any order, decree, or sentence appealed from, and all causes of appeal from vice-admiralty courts to the eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, in which the appeal and petition should have obtained possession of an ecclesiastical benefice adversely to the right of presentation or gift of the patron thereof, a clerk should be presented or collated thereto by his majesty or the ordinary by reason of a lapse, such last-mentioned clerk should be deemed to have obtained possession adversely to the right of presentation or gift of such patron as aforesaid; but that when a clerk should have been presented by his majesty upon the avoidance of a benefice in consequence of the incumbent thereof having been made a bishop, the incumbency of such clerk should for the purposes of that act be deemed a continuation of the incumbency of the clerk so made bishop; and by the said act it was further enacted, that in the construction thereof every person claiming a right to present to or bestow any ecclesiastical benefice as patron thereof, by virtue of any estate, interest, or right which the owner of an estate tail in the advowson might have barred, should be deemed to be a person claiming through the person entitled to such estate tail, and the right to bring any quare impedit, action, or suit, should be limited accordingly: provided always, and it was thereby further enacted, that after the said thirty-first day of December, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-three, no person should bring any quare impedit or other action, or any suit to enforce a right to present to or bestow any ecclesiastical benefice as the patron thereof, after the expiration of one hundred years from the time at which a clerk should have obtained possession of such benefice adversely to the right of presentation or gift of such person, or of some person through whom he claims, or of some person entitled to some preceding estate or interest or undivided share, or alternate right of presentation or gift, held or derived under the same title, unless a clerk should subsequently have obtained possession of such benefice on the presentation or gift of the person so claiming, or of some person through whom he claims, or of some other person entitled in respect of an estate, share, or right held or derived under the same title; and by the said act it was further enacted, that at the determination of the period limited by that act to any person for bringing any writ of quare impedit, or other action or suit, the right and title of such person to the advowson, for the recovery whereof such action or suit might have been brought within such period, should be extinguished: provided always, and it was thereby further enacted, that that act should not, so far as it related to any right to present to or bestow any church, vicarage, or other ecclesiastical benefice, extend to Ireland: and whereas the hereinbefore in part recited act, save in so far as it relates to any such right as last aforesaid, is already in force in Ireland, and it is expedient to extend to Ireland the whole of the provisions of that act: be it therefore enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that after the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, the several clauses and enactments in the said act passed in the session of parliament held in the third and fourth years of the reign of his late majesty King William the Fourth contained, and hereinbefore recited, relating to any right to present to or bestow any church, vicarage, or other ecclesiastical benefice, (the clause thereof providing that the said act so far as it relates to any such right shall not extend to Ireland always excepted,) shall extend and apply to Ireland, and that as fully and effectually as if the same clauses and enactments were here repeated, substituting for the said date of the thirty-first day of December, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-three, the said date of the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and forty-four.

"II. And whereas it was by the said recited act enacted, that the words and expressions therein mentioned, which in their ordinary signification have a more confined or a different meaning, should in that act, except where the nature of the provision or the context of the act should exclude such construction, be interpreted as therein follows; (that is to say,) that the person through whom another person is said to claim should mean any person by, through, or under, or by the act of whom the person so claiming became entitled to the estate or interest claimed, as heir, issue in tail, tenant by the curtesy of England, tenant in dower, Removing doubts as to the periods limited for bringing any quare impedit or other action.

"III. And whereas doubts have been entertained whether the several periods by the said act limited for bringing any quare impedit or other action, or any suit to enforce a right to present to or bestow any ecclesiastical benefice as the patron thereof, apply to the case of a bishop claiming to have right to collate to or bestow any ecclesiastical benefice in his diocese, and it is expedient that all such doubts should be removed; be it therefore enacted, that the several periods limited by the said act or by this act for bringing any quare impedit or other action, or any suit to enforce a right to present to or bestow any ecclesiastical benefice, shall apply to the case of any bishop claiming a right as patron to collate to or bestow any ecclesiastical benefice, and that such right shall be extinguished in the same manner and at the same periods as the right of any other patron to present to or bestow any ecclesiastical benefice: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect the right of any bishop to collate to any ecclesiastical benefice by reason of lapse.

"An Act to secure the Terms on which Grants are made by Her Majesty out of the Parliamentary Grant for the Education of the Poor; and to explain the Act of the fifth year of the Reign of Her present Majesty, for the Conveyance of Sites for Schools."

"Whereas during several years last past divers sums of money have been granted by parliament to her majesty, to be applied for the purpose of promoting the education of the poor in Great Britain, and similar grants may hereafter be made: and whereas her majesty hath appointed a committee of her council to receive applications for assistance from such grants, and to report thereon, and to advise her as to the terms and conditions upon which such assistance shall be granted, and many such reports have been made, and approved of by her majesty, and the terms and conditions having been assented to by the applicants, grants have been made out of the said fund: and whereas in some cases, by reason of the deeds of endowment of schools in respect of which such applications have been received having been executed before the grant has been made, such terms and conditions have not and cannot be made permanently binding on the estate; but the parties promoting the said schools have entered into personal obligations or assurances for the due performance of such terms and conditions, though deriving no beneficial interest from the charitable institution which they have established; and it is desirable to provide permanent security to her majesty and her successors for the due fulfilment of the terms and conditions, and to relieve the parties from the personal liabilities so entered into for the purposes aforesaid: be it therefore enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that where any grant hath been made or shall hereafter be made out of any sums of money heretofore granted or hereafter to be granted by parliament for the purposes of education in Great Britain, under the advice of any committee of the council on education for the time being, upon terms and conditions to provide for the inspection of the school by an inspector appointed or to be appointed by her majesty and her successors, which shall not be inserted in the conveyance of the site of the school, or in the deed declaring the trusts thereof, and such grant shall be made in aid of the purchase of the site, or of the erection, enlargement, or repair of the school, or of the residence of the master or mistress thereof, or of the furnishing of the school, such terms and conditions shall be binding and obligatory upon the trustees or managers of the said school or other the premises for the time being, in like manner and to the like effect as though they had been inserted in the conveyance of the site of the said school, or in the declaration of the trusts thereof; and henceforth all personal obligations entered into for the purpose of securing the fulfilment of such terms and conditions shall, so far as they relate thereto, but no further, be null and void: provided nevertheless, that such terms and conditions shall have been or shall be set forth in some document in writing, signed by the trustees of the said school or the major part of them, or by the party or parties conveying the site, in the case where there shall have been a voluntary gift thereof.

The terms upon which aid shall be granted to trustees of ancient endowed schools.

"II. And whereas there are many endowments for the purpose of education of the poor in Great Britain of ancient date, the schools whereon have become dilapidated, and, the funds of such endowment being insufficient for the restoration thereof, application is made by the trustees, or by the persons acting in the discharge of the trusts thereof, for aid out of the said parliamentary grant, but the same hath been declined, because such applicants could not impose upon their lawful successors in the said trust the conditions which the said committee would have advised her majesty to require to secure the due inspection of such school, and it is expedient to enable them to do so; be it therefore enacted, that when the major part of the trustees of any endowed school for the education of the poor duly appointed under the terms of the deed of endowment, or, when such deed cannot be found or cannot be acted upon, of the persons who shall be in the possession of the endowment, and shall be acting in the execution of the trusts or the reputed trusts thereof, shall, and in cases where there shall be a visitor of such school with the consent of such visitor in writing, apply for aid out of such parliamentary grant to enable them to rebuild, repair, or enlarge the school belonging to such endowment, or the residence of the master or mistress thereof, or to furnish such school, and shall in writing assent to the said school being open to inspection on behalf of her majesty and her successors, if the said committee shall deem fit to advise that any such grant shall be made, it shall immediately after the making of such grant, and thenceforth from time to time, be lawful for any inspector of schools appointed by her majesty and her successors, in conformity with the terms contained in the writing testifying such consent as aforesaid, to enter the said school at all reasonable hours in the day for the purpose of inspecting and examining the state and condition of the school and the scholars thereat, and of making such report thereon, as he shall deem fit.

Death of donor within twelve calendar months not to avoid grant.
9 Geo. 2, c. 36.

"III. And whereas by an act passed in the fifth year of the reign of her present majesty, intituled, 'An Act to afford further Facilities for the Conveyance and Endowment of Sites for Schools,' it is enacted, that any person, being seized in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for life of and in any manor, or lands of freehold, copyhold, or customary tenure, may grant, convey, or enfranchise, and subject to the provisions therein mentioned, any quantity not exceeding one acre of land as a site for a school or otherwise, as therein likewise specified; and it is desirable to prevent any such grant, being of so limited an interest, from being defeated by the death of the grantor; be it enacted, that where any deed shall have been or shall be executed under the powers and for the purposes contained in the said act, without any valuable consideration, the same shall be and continue valid, if otherwise lawful, although the donor or grantor shall die within twelve calendar months from the execution thereof.

Site may be granted to the minister and churchwardens.

"IV. And whereas it was provided by the said act that grants of land or buildings, or any interest therein, for the purposes of the education of poor persons, might be made to the minister of any parish, being a corporation, and the churchwardens or chapelwardens and overseers of the poor and their successors, and it is sometimes found inexpedient or impracticable to introduce the overseers as parties to the legal estate; be it therefore enacted, that such grants may be made to the minister and churchwardens of any parish, such minister being the rector, vicar, or perpetual curate thereof, whether endowed or not, to hold to them and their successors, subject to the provisions contained in the deed of conveyance thereof for the management, direction, and inspection of the school and premises.

“V. And be it enacted, that if the rector, vicar, or perpetual curate of any parish be desirous of making a grant of any land for the purposes and under the powers of the said act, being part of the glebe or other possessions of his benefice, and shall, with the consent of the patron of the said benefice, and of the bishop of the diocese within which the same shall be situated, grant the same to the minister and church or chapel wardens, or to the minister, church or chapel wardens, and overseers of the poor of the said parish, such grant shall be valid, and shall thenceforth enure for the purposes of the trust set forth therein, if otherwise lawful, notwithstanding such minister is the party making the grant.

And be it enacted, that when and so soon as it shall be determined that banns of matrimony may be published and marriages solemnized in any such church or chapel, the bishop of the diocese within which such church or chapel shall be locally situated, whether in any parish or extra-parochial place, or otherwise, shall certify the same, and such certificate shall be kept in the chest of the church or chapel with the books of registry thereof, and a copy thereof shall be entered in the books of the registry of banns and marriages, and a duplicate of such certificate shall be registered in the registry of the diocese, and such certificate shall be deemed and taken to be conclusive evidence in all courts, and in all questions relating to any banns published or marriages solemnized in any such church or chapel, that the same might according to law respectively be published and solemnized in such church or chapel, and that all banns published and marriages solemnized in any such church or chapel according to the laws and canons in force within this realm in that behalf shall after the granting of such certificate be good to all intents and purposes whatsoever: provided always, that no banns or marriages respectively published or solemnized according to the laws and canons in force within the realm in that behalf in any church or chapel in which the same are authorized to be respectively published, solemnized, and had by the said recited acts or this act, or either of them, shall be invalid by reason of any such certificate not having been duly given, or registered or entered, as hereinbefore required: provided also, that all fees, dues, offerings, and other emoluments on account of such marriages, whether of right or custom, belonging to the incumbent or clerk of any parish, chapelry, or place in which such church or chapel has been erected, shall be received by or for or on account of such incumbent or clerk respectively, and be paid over to them, except such of the said fees, dues, offerings, or other emoluments, or such portions thereof, as the said commissioners, with the consent of the bishop of the diocese, the patron, and the said incumbent respectively, in those cases which shall come before the said commissioners, by order made under their common seal, or the bishop of the diocese alone, with the consent of the patron and incumbent, in all other cases, by order under his name and seal, shall assign to the minister of such church or chapel; and every such instrument of assignment shall be registered in the registry of the bishop of the diocese within which said church or chapel shall be locally situated: provided always, that nothing hereinbefore contained shall be construed to take away from existing parish clerks any fees, dues, or emoluments to which they are now by law or custom entitled.

"III. And whereas, by error, banns have been published, and divers marriages have been solemnized, in chapels with districts assigned to them under the provisions of the hereinbefore recited acts or some of them, but in which chapels banns could not be legally published, nor marriages by law be solemnized; and it is expedient to remove all doubts, arising from the circumstances aforesaid, touching the validity of such marriages: be it therefore enacted, that banns already published, and marriages already solemnized, in such chapels as aforesaid, shall not hereafter be questioned on account of the said banns having been published, or the said marriages solemnized, in any such chapel as aforesaid; and the ministers or ministers who solemnized the same shall not be liable to any ecclesiastical censure, or to any other proceedings or penalties whatsoever, by reason thereof; and the registers of all marriages so solemnized as aforesaid, or copies of such registers shall be received in all courts of law and equity as evidence of such marriages respectively.

"IV. And be it enacted, that where a chapelry has been already or shall hereafter be assigned to any chapel under the provisions of the hereinbefore recited acts passed in the fifty-ninth year of the reign of King George the Third, and the order in council assigning such chapelry does not direct that marriages may be performed in such chapel, it shall be lawful for her majesty, by any supplemental order of council, on a representation to be made to her by the said commissioners, with the consent of the bishop of the diocese, to order that marriages may be performed thereafter in such chapel; and that all the fees arising therefrom, or a part thereof, “V. And be it enacted, that in any representation to her majesty in council, or in any order of council to be made thereon, or in any other matter or thing done under their common seal by the said commissioners under the authority of the hereinbefore recited acts or any other act of parliament, it shall be sufficient to refer to the section or sections as numbered in copies printed by the queen’s printer of the act or acts under the authority whereof such representation or order in council is made, or such matter or thing done, and it shall not be necessary to recite any of the provisions of such section or sections.

“II. And be it enacted, that when and so often after the passing of this act as any vacancy shall occur in the office of church clerk, chapel clerk, or parish clerk, in any district, parish, or place, it shall be lawful for the rector or other incumbent or other the person or persons entitled for the time being to appoint or elect such church clerk, chapel clerk, or parish clerk as aforesaid, if he shall think fit, to appoint or elect a person in the holy orders of deacon or priest of the united church of England and Ireland to fill the said office of church clerk, chapel clerk, or parish clerk; and such person so appointed or elected as aforesaid shall, when duly licensed as hereinafter provided, be entitled to have and receive all the profits and emoluments of and belonging to the said office, and shall also be liable in respect thereof, so long as he shall hold the same, to perform all such spiritual and ecclesiastical duties within such district, parish, or place, as the said rector or other incumbent, with the sanction of the bishop of the diocese, may from time to time require; but such person in holy orders so appointed or elected as aforesaid shall not by reason of such appointment or election have or acquire any freehold or absolute right to or interest in the said office of church clerk, chapel clerk, or parish clerk, or to or in any of the profits or emoluments thereof, but every such person in holy orders so appointed or elected as aforesaid shall at all times be liable to be suspended or removed from the said office, in the same manner and by the same authority, and for such or the like causes, as those whereby any stipendiary curate may be lawfully suspended or removed; such suspension or removal nevertheless being subject to the same power of appeal to the archbishop of the province to which any stipendiary curate is or may be entitled.

Provided always, and be it enacted, that every such appointment or election as last aforesaid, if made by any other person or persons than the rector or other incumbent of such district, parish, or place, shall be subject to the consent and approval of such rector or other incumbent of such district, parish, or place; and that no person in holy orders so appointed or elected as aforesaid shall be competent to perform any of the duties of his said office, or any other spiritual or ecclesiastical duties, within such district, parish, or place, or to receive or take any of the profits or emoluments of his said office, unless and until he shall have duly obtained from the bishop of the diocese within which such district, parish, or place, is situate, such licence and authority in that behalf

"An Act for Marriages in Ireland; and for registering such Marriages."

"Whereas it is expedient to amend the law of marriages in Ireland, and to provide the means for a register of the marriages of her majesty's subjects in that part of the United Kingdom: be it enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that after the thirty-first day of March in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-five, all the rules prescribed by the rubric concerning the solemnizing of marriages shall continue to be duly observed, except as hereinafter provided, by every person in holy orders of the united church of England and Ireland who shall solemnize any marriage in Ireland: provided always, that the giving of notice to the registrar and the issue of the registrar's certificate for marriage without licence, as hereinafter mentioned, may be used and shall stand instead of the publication of banns (1).

After 31st of March, 1845, all rules prescribed by the rubric to continue to be observed.

(1) Publication of banns.—In the case of Smith, (1 Irish Circ. Rep. 287,) who was indicted for bigamy, it appeared, that the prisoner was a protestant of the established church, and that in the year 1831, he was married to Margaret Smith, who was a presbyterian. This marriage was celebrated by a presbyterian minister, according to the rites of the presbyterian church. The prisoner and Margaret Smith, from time to time, lived together as man and wife. In 1839, the prisoner was married in St. Anne's Church, Dublin, by the parish minister, to Jane Gordon. The second marriage was proved by the head clerk of St. Anne's church, who said, that he saw a person of the name of Jane Gordon married to the prisoner on a particular day: he then produced a book purporting to be the registry book of the parish, and containing an entry of the marriage, with the signature of J. Gordon. The curate of the parish was also produced—he

to all intents and purposes, where no such publication shall have been made; and every person in holy orders of the united church of England and Ireland shall be bound to solemnize marriage on production of such certificate, in like manner as he is required to do by any law or canon now in force, after due publication of banns, so nevertheless that the church wherein any marriage according to the rites of the united church of England and Ireland shall so be solemnized, shall be within the district of the registrar by whom such certificate as aforesaid shall have been issued.

"II. And be it enacted, that nothing in this act contained shall affect the right of the Archbishop of Armagh and his successors, and his and their proper officers, to grant special licences to marry at any convenient time or place, or, except as hereinafter provided, the right of any surrogate or other person now having authority to grant licences for marriage; provided that no surrogate or other person now having authority to grant licences for marriages shall grant any licence for marriage, not being a special licence, until seven days after notice shall have been given by one of the parties who shall have resided for not less than seven days then next preceding in the parish named in that notice, under his or her hand, in the form of schedule (A) to this act annexed, or to the like effect, to such surrogate or other person having authority to grant licences as aforesaid, which notices he shall file and keep with the records of his office, and he shall also forthwith enter a true copy of such notices fairly in a book to be for that purpose furnished to him by the registrar-general hereinafter mentioned, to be called 'The Marriage Notice Book,' which book shall be open at all reasonable times, without fee, to all persons desirous of inspecting the same; and such surrogate or other person shall forthwith send a copy of such notice to the incumbent or incumbents of the parish or parishes in which the parties intending marriage dwell; and for entering every such notice the surrogate or other person shall be entitled to have a fee of one shilling, over and above the accustomed fee for granting the licence: and after the said thirty-first day of March, no person applying for any such licence shall be required to give any security by bond or otherwise before the grant of such licence; and whenever a marriage shall not be had within three calendar months after the notice shall have been so given to the surrogate or other person as aforesaid, the notice, and any licence which may have been granted thereupon, shall be utterly void.

"III. And be it enacted, that nothing in this act contained shall affect any marriages by any Roman catholic priest which may now be lawfully celebrated, nor extend to the registration of any Roman catholic chapel, but such marriages may continue to be celebrated in the same manner and subject to the same limitations and restrictions as if this act had not been passed.

"IV. And be it enacted, that marriages between parties, both of whom are presbyterians, may be solemnized according to the forms used by presbyterians, either by the licence of a presbyterian minister, or by publication of banns, as hereinafter respectively mentioned, in meeting houses to be certified as hereinafter mentioned, between the hours of eight in the morning and two in the afternoon, with open doors, and in the presence of two or more credible witnesses; and marriages between parties, of whom one only is a presbyterian, may be solemnized according to the same forms, by such licence of a presbyterian minister, in such proved, that he celebrated the marriage between the prisoner and a person who called herself Jane Gordon. The indictment alleged the second marriage to have been with Jane Gordon. She was not called as a witness, nor her absence accounted for, nor any proof given of her handwriting.

The counsel, for the prisoner, objected that this proof was not sufficient, as there was an averment of a marriage with Jane Gordon, and the only proof to support it was, that the prisoner was married to a person who called herself Jane Gordon, and cited Drake's case, Roec. Crim. Ev. 277; 1 Lewin C. C. 25.

The counsel, for the crown, proved that the prisoner was married to a person of the name of Jane Gordon; which they contended, was prima facie evidence of the identity. Ree v. Edwards, R. & R. 282.

Mr. Justice Crompton observed: "I do not think the authority cited for the prisoner is applicable to this country. The reason on which the distinction is grounded is, that if banns have not been published in England the marriage is invalid, whereas, in this country, the marriage is valid, although no banns have been published, if celebrated by a clergyman. I shall therefore overrule the objection." Vide antè 1229.

"XIII. And be it enacted, that in every case of marriage intended to be solemnized in Ireland after the said thirty-first day of March, according to the rites of the united church of England and Ireland, (unless by licence or by special licence, or after publication of banns,) and in every case of marriage intended to be solemnized in Ireland after the said thirty-first day of March according to the usages of the quakers or Jews, or according to any form authorized by this act, one of the parties shall give notice under his or her hand, in the form of schedule (A) to this act annexed, or to the like effect, to the registrar, appointed as hereinafter is mentioned, of the district within which the parties shall have dwelt for not less than seven days then next preceding, or if the parties dwell in the districts of different registrars shall give the like notice to the registrar of each district, and shall state therein the name and surname and the profession or condition of each of the parties intending marriage, the dwelling place of each of them, and the time not being less than seven days during which each has dwelt therein, and the church or other building in which the marriage is to be solemnized, which must be within the district within which one of the parties shall have dwelt for the time last aforesaid; but if either party shall have dwelt in the place stated in the notice during more than one calendar month it may be stated therein that he or she hath dwelt there one month and upwards; provided always, that no such notice shall be required for any marriage by a Roman catholic priest which may now lawfully be celebrated, or when the marriage is intended to be solemnized by a presbyterian minister between two persons, both or one of whom shall be presbyterians, in a presbyterian meeting house certified as aforesaid.

"XIV. And be it enacted, that the registrar shall file all such notices, and keep them with the records of his office, and shall also forthwith enter a true copy of all such notices fairly into a book, to be for that purpose furnished to him by the registrar-general, to be called 'The Marriage Notice Book;' the cost of providing which shall be defrayed in like manner as the cost of providing the register book hereinafter mentioned; and the marriage notice book shall be open at all reasonable times, without fee, to all persons desirous of inspecting the same; and for every such entry the registrar shall be entitled to have a fee of one shilling.

"XV. And be it enacted, that on the day previous to each weekly meeting of the guardians of any poor law union, or of any parish or place comprising the district for which such registrar shall act, the registrar shall transmit to the clerk to the guardians all such notices of intended marriage as he shall have received on or since the day previous to the weekly meeting immediately preceding the same; and such clerk shall read such notices immediately after the minutes of the proceedings of such guardians at their last meeting shall have been read; and such notices shall be so read three several times in three successive weeks at the weekly meetings of such guardians, unless in any case licence for marriage shall be sooner granted, and notice of such licence being granted shall have been given to such clerk; provided also, that if it shall happen that the board of guardians of any such union, parish, or place shall not so meet, it shall be sufficient for the purposes of this act that such notices shall be read at every meeting of such guardians which shall be held within twenty-one days from the day of such notice being entered; and, if no meeting be held within twenty-one days from the day of such notice being entered, the entry of such notice shall be sufficient for the purposes aforesaid.

"XVI. And be it enacted, that after the expiration of seven days if the marriage is to be solemnized by licence, or of twenty-one days if the marriage is to be solemnized without licence after the day of the entry of such notice, the registrar, upon being requested so to do by or on behalf of the party by whom the notice was given, shall issue under his hand a certificate in the form of schedule (B) to this act annexed, provided that no lawful impediment be shown to the satisfaction of the registrar why such certificate should not issue, and provided that the issue of such certificate shall not have been sooner forbidden in manner hereinafter mentioned by any person or persons authorized in that behalf as hereinafter is provided: and every such certificate shall state the particulars set forth in the notice, the day on which the notice was entered, and that the full period of seven days or of twenty-one days (as the case may be) has elapsed since the day of the entry of such notice, and that the issue of such certificate has not been forbidden by any person or persons authorized in that behalf; and for every such certificate the registrar shall be entitled to have a fee of one shilling.

“XVII. And be it enacted, that the registrar-general shall furnish to every registrar a sufficient number of forms of certificates, the cost of which shall be accounted for by the registrar to the registrar-general; and in order to distinguish the certificates to be issued for marriages by licence from the certificates to be issued for marriages without licence, a water-mark in the form of the word ‘licence,’ in roman letters, shall be laid and manufactured in the substance of the paper on which the certificates to be issued for marriage by licence shall be written or printed; and every certificate to be issued for marriage by licence shall be printed with red ink, and every certificate to be issued for marriage without licence shall be printed with black ink, and such other distinctive marks between the two kinds of certificate shall be used from time to time as shall seem fit to the registrar-general.

“XVIII. And be it enacted, that any person authorized in that behalf may forbid the issue of the registrar’s certificate by writing at any time before the issue of such certificate the word ‘forbidden’ opposite to the entry of the notice of such intended marriage in the marriage notice book, and by subscribing thereto his or her name and place of abode, and his or her character, in respect of either of the parties, by reason of which he or she is so authorized; and in case the issue of any such certificate shall have been so forbidden the notice and all proceedings thereupon shall be utterly void.

“XIX. And be it enacted, that after the said thirty-first day of March no marriage shall be solemnized in Ireland by licence either of a surrogate or deputy surrogate, or of a presbyterian minister or a registrar, as herein provided, where either of the parties, not being a widower or widow, shall be under the age of twenty-one years, unless the consent of the father of such of the parties so under age (if then living) be first had and obtained, or if dead of the guardian or guardians of the person of the party so under age lawfully appointed, or one of them, and in case there shall be no such guardian or guardians, then of the mother of such party, if unmarried, and if there shall be no mother unmarried, then of the guardian or guardians appointed by the court of Chancery, if any, or one of them; and every person whose consent to a marriage by licence is required as aforesaid shall be authorized to enter a caveat against the issue of licence by any person empowered by this act to grant licences, and shall be also authorized to forbid the publication of banns in any church or chapel, or certified presbyterian meeting house, and to forbid the issue of the registrar’s certificate.

“XX. Provided always, and be it enacted, that if the father or fathers of the parties to be married, or one of them, so under age as aforesaid, shall be non compos mentis, or the guardian or guardians, mother or mothers, or any of them, whose consent is made necessary as aforesaid to the marriage of such party or parties, shall be non compos mentis, or in parts beyond the seas, or shall unreasonably or from undue motives refuse or withhold his, her, or their consent to a proper marriage, then it shall be lawful for any person desirous of marrying in any of the before-mentioned cases to apply by petition to the lord chancellor or the lords commissioners of the great seal of Ireland for the time being, or master of the rolls, who shall be empowered to proceed upon such petition in a summary way; and in case the marriage proposed shall upon examination appear to be proper, the said lord chancellor, lords commissioners of the great seal for the time being, or master of the rolls, shall judicially declare the same to be so; and such judicial declaration shall be deemed and taken to be as good and effectual to all intents and purposes as if the father, guardian or guardians, or mother, of the person so petitioning, had consented to such marriage.

"XXII. And be it enacted, that before any licence for marriage shall be granted by any such registrar one of the parties intending marriage shall appear personally before such registrar, and, in case the notice of such intended marriage shall not have been given exclusively to such registrar, shall deliver to him the certificate of the other registrar to whom such notice shall have been given, and such party shall make oath, or shall make his or her solemn affirmation or declaration instead of taking an oath, that he or she believeth that there is not any impediment of kindred or alliance or other lawful hindrance to the said marriage, and that one of the said parties hath for the space of fifteen days immediately before the day of the grant of such licence had his or her usual place of abode within the district within which such marriage is to be solemnized, and that they are both of the full age of twenty-one years, or, where either of the parties shall be under the age of twenty-one years, that the consent of the person or persons whose consent to such marriage is required by law has been obtained thereto, or that there is no person having authority to give such consent, or that such party is a widower or widow, as the case may be.

"XXIII. And be it enacted, that any person, upon the payment of the sum of five shillings, may enter a caveat with the registrar against the grant of a certificate or a licence for the marriage of any person named therein; and if any caveat be entered with the registrar, such caveat being duly signed by or on behalf of the person who enters the same, together with his or her place of residence, and the ground of objection on which his or her caveat is founded, no certificate or licence shall issue or be granted until the registrar shall have examined into the matter of the caveat, and is satisfied that it ought not to obstruct the grant of the certificate or licence for the said marriage, or until the caveat be withdrawn by the party who entered the same; provided that in cases of doubt it shall be lawful for the registrar to refer the matter of any such caveat to the registrar-general, who shall decide upon the same; provided likewise, that in case of the registrar refusing the grant of the certificate or licence the person applying for the same shall have a right to appeal to the registrar-general, who shall thereupon either confirm the refusal or direct the grant of the certificate or licence.

"XXIV. And be it enacted, that after the said thirty-first day of March no marriage after such notice as aforesaid, unless by virtue of a licence to be granted by the registrar, shall be solemnized or registered in Ireland until after the expiration of twenty-one days after the day of the entry of such notice as aforesaid: and no marriage shall be solemnized by the licence of any registrar or registered until after the expiration of seven days after the day of the entry of such notice as aforesaid.

"XXV. And be it enacted, that whenever a marriage shall not be had within three calendar months after the day on which the notice shall have been so entered by the registrar, the notice and certificate, and any licence which may have been granted thereupon, and all other proceedings thereupon, shall be utterly void; and no person shall proceed to solemnize the marriage, nor shall any registrar register the same, until new notice shall have been given, and entry made, and certificate thereof given, at the time and in the manner aforesaid.

“XXVI. And be it enacted, that the registrar's certificate, or, in case the parties shall have given notice to the registrars of different districts, the certificate of each registrar, shall be delivered to the officiating minister, if the marriage shall be solemnized according to the rites of the united church of England and Ireland, or to the registering officer of the people called quakers for the place where the marriage is solemnized, if the same shall be solemnized according to the usages of the said people, or to the officer of a synagogue by whom the marriage is registered, if the same shall be solemnized according to the usages of persons professing the Jewish religion, and in all other cases shall be delivered to the registrar present at the marriage, as hereinafter provided, and shall be by him kept with the records of his office.

“XXVII. And be it enacted, that any proprietor or trustee of a separate building, being a place of religious worship, may apply to the registrar of the district, in order that such building may be registered for solemnizing marriages therein, and in such case shall deliver to the registrar a certificate, signed in duplicate by ten householders at the least, that such building has been used by them during one year at the least as their usual place of public religious worship, and that they are desirous that such place should be registered as aforesaid, each of which certificates shall be countersigned by the proprietor or trustee by whom the same shall be delivered; and the registrar shall send both certificates to the registrar-general, who shall cause such building to be registered accordingly in a book to be kept for that purpose at the general register office; and the registrar-general shall cause to be endorsed on both certificates the date of the registry, and shall keep one certificate with the other records of the general register office, and shall return the other certificate to the registrar, who shall keep the same with the other records of his office; and the registrar shall enter the date of the registry of such building in a book to be furnished to him for that purpose by the registrar-general, and shall give a certificate of such registry under his hand, on parchment or vellum, to the proprietor or trustee by whom the certificates are countersigned, and shall give public notice of the registry thereof by advertisement in some newspaper circulating within the county, and in the Dublin Gazette; and for every such entry, certificate, and publication, the registrar shall receive at the time of the delivery to him of the certificates the sum of one pound.

“XXVIII. And be it enacted, that if at any time subsequent to the registry of any such building for solemnizing marriages therein it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the registrar-general that such building has been disused for the public religious worship of the congregation on whose behalf it was registered as aforesaid, the registrar-general shall cause the registry thereof to be cancelled; provided that if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the registrar-general that the same congregation use instead thereof some other such building for the purpose of public religious worship, the registrar-general may substitute and register such new place of worship instead of the disused building, although such new place of worship may not have been used for that purpose during one year then next preceding; and every application for cancelling the registry of any such building, or for such substitution and registry of a substituted building, shall be made to the registrar-general by or through the registrar of the district; and such cancelling or substitution, when made, shall be made known by the registrar-general to the registrar, who shall enter the fact and the date thereof in the book provided for the registry of such buildings, and shall certify and publish such cancelling or substitution and registry in manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the original registry of the disused building; and for every such substitution the registrar shall receive from the party requiring the substitution the sum of one pound; and after such cancelling or substitution shall have been made by the registrar-general, it shall not be lawful to solemnize any marriage in such disused building, unless the same shall be again registered in the manner hereinbefore provided.

“XXXIII. And whereas it is expedient that provision should be made, under proper restrictions, for relieving the inhabitants of populous districts remote from the parish church, or from any chapel wherein marriages may be lawfully celebrated according to the rites and ceremonies of the united church of England and Ireland, from the inconvenience to which they may be thereby subjected in the solemnization of their marriages; be it therefore enacted, that, with the consent of the patron and incumbent respectively of the church of the parish or district in which may be situated any public chapel with or without a chapelry thereto annexed, or any chapel duly licensed for the celebration of divine service according to the rites and ceremonies of the united church of England and Ireland, or any chapel the minister whereof is duly licensed to officiate therein according to the rites and ceremonies of the united church of England and Ireland, or without such consent after two calendar months notice in writing given by the registrar of the diocese to such patron and incumbent respectively, the bishop of the diocese may, if he shall think it necessary for the due accommodation and convenience of the inhabitants, authorize by a licence under his hand and seal the publication of banns and solemnization of marriages in any such chapel for persons residing within a district the limits whereof shall be specified in the bishop’s licence, and under such provisions as to the said bishop may seem fit, and as may be specified in the said licence; and the said licence shall be construed to extend to and authorize marriages in such chapels between parties, one or both of whom is or are resident within the said district: provided always, that where the parties to any marriage intended to be solemnized after publication of banns shall reside within different ecclesiastical districts, the banns for such marriage shall be published as well in the church or chapel wherein such marriage is intended to be solemnized as in the chapel licensed under the provisions of this act for the other district within which one of the parties is resident, and if there be no such chapel then in the church or chapel in which the banns of such last-mentioned party may be legally published: provided also, that it shall be lawful for any patron or incumbent who shall refuse or withhold consent to the grant of any such licence to deliver to the bishop, under his or her hand and seal, a statement of the reasons for which such consent shall have been so refused or withholden; and no such licence shall be granted by any bishop until he shall have inquired into the matter of such reasons; and every instrument of consent of the patron and incumbent, or, if such consent be refused or withholden, a copy of the notice under the hand of the registrar, and every statement of reasons alleged as aforesaid by the patron or incumbent, with the bishop's adjudication thereupon under his hand and seal, shall be registered in the registry of the diocese; and thenceforth and until the said licence be revoked marriages solemnized in such chapel shall be as valid to all intents and purposes as if the same had been solemnized in the parish church, or in any chapel where marriages might heretofore have been legally solemnized.

And be it enacted, that all fees, dues, and other emoluments on account of the solemnization of marriages, which belong to the incumbent or clerk respectively of any church or chapel in any parish or district within which the solemnization of marriages shall be authorized as aforesaid, shall respectively be received, until the avoidance of such church or chapel next after the passing of this act, for or on account of such incumbent, and until the vacancy in the office of clerk next after the passing of this act for and on account of such clerk, and be paid over to them, except such portion of the fees, dues, or other emoluments as the said bishop of the diocese, with the consent of the said incumbent and clerk respectively, shall in such aforesaid licence assign to the minister and clerk respectively of the chapel in which the solemnization of marriages shall be authorized as aforesaid; and that it shall be lawful for the said bishop, in and by such licence, without any such consent, to declare that from and after such next avoidance or vacancy respectively the whole or such part of the fees, dues, and other emoluments on account of the solemnization of marriages in such last-mentioned chapel, as shall be specified in such licence, shall be receivable and the same shall thenceforth be received by or for the minister and clerk of such chapel respectively.

And be it enacted, that when the said bishop shall authorize the solemnization of marriages in any such chapel as aforesaid, without the consent of the patron and incumbent respectively, it shall be lawful for them or either of them to appeal within one calendar month to the archbishop of the province, who shall hear the same in a summary manner, and shall make such order, confirming, revoking, or varying the licence so given, as to him shall seem meet and expedient, which order shall be registered in the registry of the diocese, and shall be conclusive and binding on all parties whatsoever.

Patron or may appeal to the archbishop against such

“XXXVIII. Provided always, and be it enacted, that, notwithstanding a such licence as aforesaid to solemnize marriages in any such chapel, the parties may, if they think fit, have their marriage solemnized in the parish church, or in any chapel in which heretofore the marriage of such parties or either of them might have been legally solemnized.

“XXXIX. And be it enacted, that any such licence or order may at any time be revoked by writing under the hand and seal of the bishop of the diocese, with the consent in writing of the archbishop of the province; and such revocation and consent shall be registered in the registry of the diocese, the registrar whereof shall notify the same in writing to the minister officiating in the chapel, and shall also give public notice thereof by advertisement in some newspaper circulating within the county, and in the Dublin Gazette, and thenceforth the authority to solemnize marriages in such chapel shall cease.

“XL. And be it enacted, that in case of the revocation of the licence to solemnize marriages in any such chapel all registers of marriages solemnized thereunder under such licence which shall be in the custody or possession of the minister of such chapel at the time of such revocation shall forthwith be transmitted to the incumbent or officiating minister of the parish church, and shall thenceforth be preserved, and in all other respects dealt with in the same manner, and be of the same force and validity, to all intents and purposes, as if they had been originally made by and deposited with such incumbent or officiating minister; and that said incumbent or minister shall, when he next transmits to the registrar copies of the registers of marriages solemnized in such parish church, also therewith transmit copies of all such entries as shall have been made in such first-mentioned registers subsequent to the date of the last entry a copy whereof was transmitted to the registrar, and shall also transmit to him one copy of every register book so transmitted to him of which no copy shall have been already transmitted to the registrar, having first signed his name at the foot of the last entry therein.

“XLI. And be it enacted, that the registrar of every diocese shall, within fifteen days after the said thirty-first day of March, and also within fifteen days after the first day of January in every succeeding year, make out and send through the post office, directed to the registrar-general of marriages at his office, a list of all chapels belonging to the united church of England and Ireland within that diocese where marriages may lawfully be solemnized according to the rites and ceremonies of the united church of England and Ireland, and shall distinguish in such list whether they have a parish, chapelry, or other recognised ecclesiastical division annexed to them, and which are chapels licensed by the bishop under this act, and shall set therein the district for which each of such chapels is licensed according to the description thereof in the licence; and the registrar-general shall in every year cause to be made out and printed a list of all such chapels, and also of all places of public worship registered under the provisions of this act, and shall state in such list the county and registrar's district within which each chapel or registered place of worship is situated, and shall add also the names and places of abode of the registrar, and a copy of such list shall be sent to every registrar.

“XLII. And be it enacted, that every marriage solemnized under this act shall be good and cognizable in like manner as marriages before the passing of this act according to the rites of the united church of England and Ireland.

“XLIII. evidence that the registrar-general has declared such caveat to be entered on frivolous grounds, and that they ought not to obstruct the grant of the licence.

“XLIV. And be it enacted, that every person who shall knowingly and wilfully make any false declaration or sign any false notice or certificate required by this act, for the purpose of procuring any marriage, and every person who shall forbid the issue of any registrar's certificate, by falsely representing himself or herself to be a person whose consent to such marriage is required by this act, or by falsely representing himself to be acting on behalf of such person, knowing such representation to be false, shall suffer the penalties of perjury.

“XLV. And be it enacted, that every person who after the said thirty-first day of March shall knowingly and wilfully solemnize any marriage or pretended marriage in Ireland, unless by special licence of the Archbishop of Armagh and his successors, and his or their proper officers, in any other place than a church or chapel in which marriages may be solemnized according to the rites of the united church of England and Ireland, or a presbyterian meeting house certified as aforesaid, or than the registered building or office specified in the notice and certificate as aforesaid, shall be guilty of felony, (except in the case of a marriage by any Roman catholic priest which may now be lawfully celebrated, or a marriage between two of the society of friends commonly called quakers, according to the usages of the said society, or between two persons professing the Jewish religion, according to the usages of the Jews,) and every person who in any such registered building or office shall knowingly and wilfully solemnize any marriage or pretended marriage in the absence of the registrar shall be guilty of felony; and every person who shall knowingly and wilfully solemnize any marriage or pretended marriage in Ireland after the said thirty-first day of March, (except by licence,) within twenty-one days after the day of the entry of the notice to the registrar as aforesaid, or if the marriage is by licence within seven days after the day of the entry required by this act made in any marriage notice book, or after three calendar months after the day of such entry, shall be guilty of felony.

“XLVI. And be it enacted, that every person knowingly and wilfully solemnizing any marriage, unless after due publication of banns or licence, or the issue of the registrar's certificate, or who shall knowingly and wilfully grant any such licence or publish any such banns, after the issue of such licence or the publication of such banns shall have been lawfully forbidden by some person authorized as aforesaid, shall be guilty of felony.

“XLVII. And be it enacted, that every registrar who shall knowingly and wilfully issue any certificate for marriage after the expiration of three calendar months after the day on which the notice shall have been entered by him as aforesaid, or any certificate for marriage by licence before the expiration of seven days after the day of the entry of the notice, or any certificate for marriage without licence before the expiration of twenty-one days after the day of the entry of the notice, or any certificate the issue of which shall have been forbidden as aforesaid by any person authorized to forbid the issue of the registrar's certificate, or who shall knowingly and wilfully register any marriage herein declared to be null and void, and every registrar who shall knowingly and wilfully issue any licence for marriage after the expiration of three calendar months after the day on which the notice shall have been entered by the registrar as aforesaid, or who shall knowingly and wilfully solemnize or permit to be solemnized in his office any marriage herein declared to be null and void, shall be guilty of felony.

“XLVIII. And be it enacted, that every prosecution under this act shall be commenced within the space of three years after the offence committed.

And be it enacted, that, in order to provide the means for a register of the marriages of her majesty's subjects in Ireland who shall be married under the provisions of this act, it shall be lawful for the lord lieutenant to provide a proper office in the city of Dublin, to be called 'The General Register Office,' for keeping a register of such marriages, and to appoint for the said office a registrar-general of marriages in Ireland, and from time to time at pleasure to remove the said registrar-general, and appoint some other person in his room.

And be it enacted, that the lord lieutenant, or the registrar-general, subject to the approval of the lord lieutenant, shall appoint from time to time such officers, clerks, and servants as he shall deem necessary to carry on the business of the general registry office, and at pleasure remove them or any of them; and the lord high treasurer or commissioners of her majesty's Treasury, or any three of

(1) Wilfully false . . . declaration:—In Lane v. Goodwin, (4 Q. B. 361,) it was held, that a licence under which marriage has been solemnized, and in which one of the parties is described by a name wholly different from his own, is not void by the misdescription; but it seems, that it would be void, if the name of one person had been inserted with a fraudulent intention that the licence should be used by another:—

Lord Deasman observing, "There is no authority for the general proposition that a marriage licence is made absolutely void by a mistake in the name of one party. The reason for which banns are held invalid on this account does not extend to licences. There might perhaps be reasons for making the rule as to banns extend to licences; mischiefs may result from fraud, as Mr. Greaves has ingeniously pointed out. But the protection given by the one, is of a different kind from that afforded by the other. No fraud is suggested here: and, although Cope v. Burt, (1 Consist. 434; 1 Phill. 224,) does not entirely agree in circumstances with the present case, yet the language used by Lord Stowell in that case, in the Consistory court, shews the prevailing opinion in the ecclesiastical courts as to the distinction between banns and licence: and my brother Patterson on inquiry, finds the existence of that opinion confirmed."

Mr. Justice Patterson: "I acted on the authority of Cope v. Burt, (Ibid.) at the trial, though without having the case itself before me. I have inquired as to the opinions of the ecclesiastical courts on this subject (ante 1235), and find that Cope v. Burt, (1 Consist. 434,) and Cockburn v. Garwood, (cit. Ibid. 435,) have always been considered decisive authorities there. The distinction between banns and licences is clear: and, although perhaps, if a licence were obtained for one person with the intention that it should be used for another, such a licence might not be valid, that is not the case here: and the objection cannot prevail."

them, shall fix the salary of the registrar-general, so that the same shall not at any time exceed the sum of eight hundred pounds yearly, and shall fix the salaries of the officers, clerks, and servants in fit proportion, according to the duties they may have to perform.

“LIV. And be it enacted, that the salaries of the registrar-general and of the said officers, clerks, and servants, and all expenses of carrying on the business of the general registry office, not herein otherwise provided for, shall be paid by the said lord high treasurer, or commissioners of her majesty’s Treasury, out of the consolidated fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

“LV. And be it enacted, that the lord lieutenant, or the registrar-general, with his approbation, from time to time may make regulations for the management of the said register office, and for the duties of the registrar-general, clerks, officers, and servants of the said office, and of the registrars hereinafter mentioned, in the execution of this act, so that they be not contrary to the provisions herein contained; and the regulations so made and approved shall be binding on the said registrar-general, clerks, officers, and servants, and on the registrars.

“LVI. And be it enacted, that the registrar-general shall send once in every year to the lord lieutenant, who shall forthwith transmit the same to one of the principal secretaries of state, a general abstract of the number of marriages registered during the foregoing year, in such form as the said secretary from time to time shall require; and every such annual general abstract shall be laid before parliament within one calendar month after receipt thereof, or, if parliament be not then sitting, within one calendar month after the next meeting of parliament.

“LVII. And be it enacted, that the lord lieutenant shall, as soon as may be after the passing of this act, form all the parishes, townships, and places in Ireland into districts; and the lord lieutenant shall appoint a sufficient number of fit persons to be registrars for such districts, and shall appoint the districts which each shall superintend; and every such registrar shall hold his office during the pleasure of the registrar-general.

“LVIII. And be it enacted, that a register office shall be provided and upheld in each district, according to a plan to be approved by the registrar-general, for preserving the registers to be deposited therein, as hereinafter provided; and the care of the said office, and the custody of the registers deposited therein, shall be given to the registrar of the district.

“LIX. And be it enacted, that the appointments of registrars, and the duplicates and certified copies of registers, hereinafter mentioned, shall be exempt from stamp duties.

“LX. And be it enacted, that the registrar-general shall furnish to every registrar a sufficient number of strong iron boxes to hold the register books to be kept by every such registrar; and every such box shall be furnished with a lock and key, which key shall be kept by the registrar; and the register books of each district, while in the custody of the registrar, and not in use, shall be always kept in the register box, and the register box shall always be left locked.

“LXI. And be it enacted, that in every case in which any registrar shall be removed from or cease to hold the said office, all register boxes, keys, books, documents, and papers in his possession as such registrar shall be given as soon as conveniently may be to his successor in office; and if any person shall refuse to give up any such box, key, books, documents, or papers in such case as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace for the county or other jurisdiction where such person shall be or reside, upon application made for that purpose, to issue a warrant under his hand and seal for bringing such person before any two justices of the peace for the said county or other jurisdiction; and upon such person appearing, or not being found, it shall be lawful for such justices to hear and determine the matter in a summary way; and if it shall appear to the justices that any such box, key, books, documents, or papers are in the custody or power of any such person, and that he has refused or wilfully neglected to deliver the same, the said justices shall commit such offender to the common gaol or house of correction for the said county or jurisdiction, there to remain without bail until he “III. Provided always, and be it enacted, that no fee whatever shall be payable for or in respect of any such warrant as aforesaid; and that a fee of one pound, and no more, shall be receivable by the secretary of any bishop for and in respect of each and every licence granted by such bishop of a spiritual person as minister or perpetual curate of any such district or new parish as aforesaid, or of any building licensed by such bishop within any such district for the performance of divine service, pursuant to the provisions of the said act; and no further or larger fee or gratuity shall be receivable by any person whomsoever for or in respect of the making, issuing, or granting of any such licence as aforesaid.

"An Act for the more effectual Application of Charitable Donations and Bequests in Ireland."

"Whereas it is expedient that the pious intentions of charitable persons should not be defeated by the concealment and misapplication of their donations and bequests to public and private charities in Ireland; and whereas the provision of the act passed by the parliament of Ireland in the third year of his late majesty King George the Third, intitled, 'An Act for the better Discovery of Charitable

Donations and Bequests,' and of the act passed by the parliament of Ireland in the fortieth year of the reign of his said late majesty King George the Third, intituled, 'An Act to amend an Act passed in the third year of His present Majesty King George the Third, intituled, "An Act for the better Discovery of Charitable Donations and Bequests,"' have been found insufficient for such purposes; and it is expedient and necessary that provision should be made for the better management of such charitable donations and bequests as have been heretofore made, and such as hereafter may be made: be it therefore enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the commencement of this act the hereinbefore recited acts shall be repealed, save as to anything done at any time before the commencement of this act, all which shall be and remain good to all intents and purposes whatsoever as if this act had not passed.

"II. And be it enacted, that the master of the rolls in the high court of Chancery of Ireland for the time being, the chief baron of the court of Exchequer in Ireland for the time being, and the judge of her majesty's court of Prerogative for causes ecclesiastical and court of Faculties in and throughout Ireland for the time being, together with ten other proper and discreet persons, to be from time to time appointed by her majesty in council, by warrant under the sign manual, of which ten persons five, and not more than five, shall at all times be persons professing the Roman catholic religion, shall be one body politic and corporate, by the name of 'The Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for Ireland,' and by that name shall have perpetual succession and a common seal, and by that name may sue and be sued.

"III. And be it enacted, that the said commissioners shall be at all times removable by her majesty in council, by warrant under the sign manual; and that whenever, by death, resignation, removal, or otherwise, any person shall cease to be a commissioner under this act, it shall be lawful for her majesty, by warrant as aforesaid, to appoint one other person instead of the person so ceasing to be such commissioner; and every appointment of the said commissioners and their successors shall be published in the Dublin Gazette.

"IV. And be it enacted, that all things which the said commissioners are by this act authorized to do may be done by any five of such commissioners: provided always, that such five commissioners be for such purpose assembled at a meeting whereof due notice shall have been given to all the said commissioners.

"V. And be it enacted, that at each meeting of the said commissioners the said master of the rolls, or in his absence the said chief baron of the court of Exchequer, or in his absence the said judge of the Prerogative court, if present, and in the absence of all, the senior commissioner in the order of appointment, shall preside; and the chairman at all such meetings shall not only vote as a commissioner, but, in case of the equality of votes, shall have also the casting or decisive vote.

"VI. Provided always, and be it enacted, that the consideration of all charitable donations and bequests, and of matters relating to them, in which any question shall arise before the said commissioners concerning the usages or discipline of the united church of England and Ireland, or of any body of protestant nonconformists, shall be referred to a committee of the said commissioners consisting of those commissioners who are protestants; and that the consideration of all charitable donations and bequests, and of matters relating to them, in which any question shall arise before the said commissioners, concerning the usages or discipline of the church of Rome, shall be referred to a committee of the said commissioners consisting of those commissioners who profess the Roman catholic religion; and that whenever, by reason of reference to or intendment of any usage of any such church or body, or any district or division, in use according to the discipline of any such church or body, the object of the donation, devise, or bequest shall not be defined with legal certainty in the deed or will creating the trust, the committee to which the same shall be referred shall certify to the commissioners who is, according to the uses and intendment of such church or body, the person for the time being
